Granny bristled, glared at the woodsman, who could so nonchalantly indict women. "It's a pity," she said in a tone gently acid, "that you were born into a world cursed with women!"

Mr. Flipp turned a solemn expression upon her. He scratched the stubble on his narrow chin, and gave the matter judicial consideration. "Well, it's all right with women around—fer them that wants 'em. If a feller don't git messed up with one, it's all right, I reckin. Once he gits hooked, though, he ain't ever the same."

"Maybe that's a blessing for all concerned!" Granny snapped. "If some men were never the same again, the world would be better off."

Kate laughed. "Let's not have any rifts developing among us! There's enough trouble trying to develop from the outside."

"Anyway," Andy put in, "we don't have time for quarreling now. We've got to figure up what we'll need in the way of lumber and materials for adding to the house."

Mr. Eliot and Mr. Flipp made their departure, leaving Kate and Andy to work out their plans for enlarging the house—aided, abetted, and deterred by suggestions from Dave, Granny, and Hope.

"We'll just have to add one room this time," Andy said. "And put new floors throughout, and a new roof on. Later, as we're able, we can remodel the house."

"Another room will let us spread out a lot more," Kate said. "It'll make a great difference. And new floors and a roof, then some paint and wallpaper—"

"And some flowers around it next spring," Granny put in.

"And when the electric line is put through here," Andy added, "we can hook an automatic pressure pump onto our pipe and have water in the house. A sink, maybe, with hot and cold water and—"

"A bathroom," Hope added dreamily. "A white bathtub half filled with warm, soapy water and—"

Making Plans For Remodeling

"A chauffeur waiting to bring the limousine around to the front," Dave cut in. "Say, we're farmers, not bankers!"

"We're not even farmers yet," his father reminded him. "There's a lot to be done before we can lay claim to that title. Look at the land we've got to clear!"

"Ugh-m!" Dave groaned, remembering the sharp pains in his shoulders after a session with the crosscut saw. "But we can do it!"

"The spirit of '76!" Hope congratulated him.

"All right, now," Andy broke in. "We've got to figure a little. Keep quiet, you two. Now, this room's about fifteen by fifteen, and it'll take tongue and groove flooring. Maybe we'll have to replace a sill or two, but I can cut them instead of buying—" and with that he and Kate and Granny, who had been in on the building of a house or two in her long career, got down to business.

Hope sat by the fire and thought of things—of Harbisonville, and whether she would enjoy being there again, even with the family. Already she liked being out here, lonesome though it would be when the newness wore off. She thought of how the girls in Harbisonville would laugh if they could see her now, sitting before the blazing fire in this shack, in country where one could hear wolves howling, where deer raced past, where rattlesnakes were said to be abundant. And what would Wall say?

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Russia Threatens Yugoslav Regime; Truman Takes Arms Row to People; Excise Tax Cut Stymied This Year

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

YUGOSLAVIA:

War Clouds

Was the United States ready to go to war on behalf of Yugoslavia?

That was a paramount question as the hard-boiled struggle between Yugoslavia and Russia reached the threat-of-war stage. Diplomats pondered the question: What would the United States do if Stalin sent the Soviet army to overthrow Marshal Tito's regime in Yugoslavia?

BRITISH and American diplomats, however, ruled out the likelihood of a shooting war. They regarded Moscow's threat to "take more effective measures" in Yugoslavia as only a part of the war of nerves. British newspapers took a different view. They regarded the Soviet note as the "worst threat of war since 1939."

No one outside the Kremlin could know for sure what was coming next. But the threat that began 14 months ago to upset Tito when the Cominform read him out of the Communists party developed long ago into frequent shootings along the satellite borders.

Diplomats in Belgrade frankly were worried. As an example of the jittery situation, one embassy thought it had an inside tip on an "invasion" date.

THE QUESTION of American involvement was not quite as academic as it might appear. With the issue squarely joined between Communism and the west, and with the U.S. serving as the arsenal of the west, involvement as a result of any warlike Kremlin move was an ever-present possibility.

EXCISE TAX:

Not This Year

All hope for any reduction this year of federal excise taxes appeared doomed as congress shut the door on the issue. Excise taxes are collected on such items as furs, jewelry, luggage, cosmetics, transportation and telephone bills.

CHAIRMAN DOUGHTON (D., N.C.) of the tax-writing house ways and means committee issued a statement saying that he sees no prospect for a reduction in these taxes now. He gave as a reason the federal deficit threat of more than five billion dollars in the current fiscal year.

To clarify the subject for consumers, he added:

"I believe it is important to make this clear so that consumers will not postpone the purchase of goods subject to tax in the hope of an immediate reduction."

BUT HE HELD out hope of tax reliefs in the future. He said he had requested the congressional staff of tax experts to begin now a study of possible tax revisions and reductions for the consideration of congress next year. There was a hint, however, that if present excises are lowered, some other taxes may be increased—unless federal expenditures are reduced.

There remained a middle course, Doughton went on, which might provide a reasonable reduction in government expenditures, to require some increase in taxes where the increase can be borne without disturbing the economy, and to provide for a reduction in those taxes which are crippling enterprise and interfering with business expansion.

ACID TEST:

Fails For Granny

The gambling grandmother of Gardena, Calif., had a relapse.

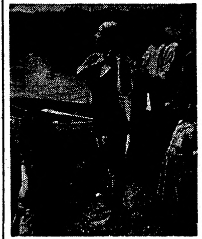
MRS. SULA BELL STIMSON, 49, had been stricken with a compelling urge to gamble. She reached the stage where she forged checks with which to obtain funds for poker playing. She just couldn't resist the yen to see what that next card would be.

Last November she was brought into court for her weakness and was placed on probation for three years. Last April she was arrested again and a physician testified she had undergone a personality change from a normal housewife to a person afflicted with a craving for gambling.

HE SAID doses of glutamic acid had been used with some success in similar cases, recommended such treatment for Mrs. Stimson. The court agreed, and she was released to the custody of her family with court orders to continue the treatment.

It didn't work. The gambling grandmother had succumbed again to the fascination of the poker deck. The acid test had failed.

Prep for Shirley



Shirley May France, 17-year old Somerset, Mass., schoolgirl, prepares for one of her last workouts prior to attempting to swim the English channel.

TRUMAN:

To The People

President Truman submitted his arms-for-Europe proposal to the people through the medium of the golden jubilee convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars at Miami.

DECLARING the armament proposal was the "price of peace," he termed it this nation's guarantee against war and urged approval.

The President, contending that peace with freedom and justice cannot be "bought cheaply," urged that congress immediately approve the 1.5 billion-dollar arms outlay.

He conceded the cost was "considerable," but added that it "represents an investment in security that will be worth many times its cost."

There were those in congress, however, who were in noticeable disagreement with President Truman. These included several congressmen who have been stalwart supporters of administration policy.

THE DISSENTERS argued that it was "pouring money down a rathole" to attempt to prevent war or adequately arm the north Atlantic pact signatories as the Truman proposal planned. Others declared the program was simply "putting small arms in the hands of constabulary of little nations." U. S. military experts agreed that even with the program operative as envisioned by the President, Russia could overrun the continent in 60 days.

Claiming this, they added that since the U.S. would have to pay for World War III anyway if and when it came, the wiser course would be to build up national defense and striking power to the point where no surprise attack on this nation could be successful.

ELECTRONICS:

Machine Has 'Brain'

The parade of "mechanical brain" devices appeared never-ending. The newest group—an automatic computer called Binac—is smaller, cheaper, brighter than the others.

It can calculate 12,000 times faster than a human being and does problems 25 times faster than more complicated machines. The inventors predicted it would usher in another industrial revolution in which machines can take over many jobs now done by man.

BINAC, built to order for Northrop aircraft company, was designed especially for complicated engineering problems such as in designing new military aircraft and guided missiles.

But Binac was not the last word in the field of mechanical "brains." A larger, general-purpose type of "magic brain" called Univac was under construction. Its first customer will be the U. S. census bureau.

UNIVAC, it was said, could even play chess, but only about as good as an average player, not an expert. It is expected that the machine also would be able to write simple melodies and lyrics because musical harmonics follow simple rules.

With Univac, according to reports, the American people will find out a lot of things they didn't know about themselves—that is, statistically speaking.

CHINA REDS:

Trading Is Out

It had a familiar ring: "You can't do business with the Chinese Communists." Remember? "You can't do business with Hitler." That certainly was true, and according to officials best informed on the Chinese situation, it was equally true of the Chinese Reds.

SLOWLY BUT SURELY, American businessmen and officials are finding out the truth of the statement. In ever-increasing numbers they are pulling out of the great centers in China. And with them goes inevitably the prospect for any important trade agreements between the United States and Communist China.

Yet there was an annoying paradox in the situation for the Chinese friends of the Kremlin. For the fact was that the Reds would have to turn to the United States if they were to obtain many things they need to fill the gaping holes in China's distraught economy.

THE American state department and other U. S. officials are incensed at the way American officials and private citizens have been treated by the Communists in China. They apparently have come to the conclusion that nothing can be accomplished by maintaining large consulate staffs in cities where the Reds have taken over. Weeks of trying to come to some terms with the Communists show nothing but failure.

To the initiate, this came as a surprise to U. S. policy makers. They had expected that as the Chinese Communists poured into Shanghi and other coastal points they would take a live-and-let-live attitude toward the Americans. They also figured that the Communists would have to do business with the U.S., inasmuch as they would have to look to the West rather than Russia for imports to meet China's economic needs.

But somehow or other it didn't work out that way.

POLIO:

Isolation Cut

Sufficient beds for polio patients in the nation's hospitals—a major problem in fighting the malady—appeared to be in sight as a result of a new approach to treatment and diagnosis in the early stages of the disease.

THIS may be brought about almost overnight and it can be done without adding a single bed in hospitals for acute cases, or training another nurse. Too, it will save millions of dollars in the cost of treatment.

All this is declared possible because of a decision by public health and medical authorities cutting the isolation period for early polio to one week—longer only if the fever lasts longer. Some states have been isolating polio patients for two weeks, some even for three or four, but the average has been two weeks.

The one week recommendation, made by 20 medical authorities, is part of a new guide for health officers of all the states. The guide is being sent to local health authorities, hospitals and doctors by the various state health officers.

POLIO patients are kept isolated when they are first ill to prevent spread of the disease, but medical studies have concluded that the disease is communicable only during the first three or four days before symptoms appear, and for two or three days afterward.

So for safety, isolation, the experts said, is necessary for only a week, or as long as there is a fever.

Open Season

Since film star Jimmy Stewart abandoned his bachelor status, Farley Granger, hailed as one of the movies' top romantic stars, is now Hollywood's No. 1 eligible bachelor. He is shown here in the role of Johnse Hatfield in a picture depicting the famous Hatfield-McCoy feud.

'BULL'ETIN:

Now He Knows

Joe King left Empire, Wis., with a 1,600-pound bull—but he got paid for only 1,410 pounds. This will probably teach Joe a lesson.

The distance to market was 13 miles overland. Joe had a truck but he decided he and the bull would hoof it. "It was kind of cool," he said, "and it seemed like a good idea. Five hours and 15 minutes later, Joe and the bull arrived. The bull lost 190 pounds.

U. S. AGENCIES

Six Departments Undergo 'Streamlining'

As a result of congressional action several government agencies went under the streamline plan and some mild reshuffling came about. Some 3,300 federal employees were affected as six of President Truman's reorganization plans went into effect under terms of the reorganization act of 1949.

Summing up, here is the gist of what occurred: The U. S. employment service went back into the labor department; the post office department and the maritime and civil service commissions were revamped with greater efficiency as the aim; the bureau of public roads became part of the commerce department; the national security resources board and the national security council became parts of the executive office.

G-Man Hoover Scans Career

Has Served Bureau For Past 25 Years

WASHINGTON, D. C.—It was 25 years ago that John E. Hoover, a librarian turned lawyer, took command of a run down police force whose officers could neither make arrests nor carry guns.

In a quarter century, much has happened.

America's criminal glossary has been swelled by such terms as "G-man," "G-heat" and "public enemy." The era of gang warfare as a national characteristic and kidnaping as a big time source of racket money have flowered and faded. The careers of "Machine Gun" Kelly, Dillinger and Karpis have boomed in the news headlines and ended at morgue and prison gates.

And along the way, "John E." has become "J. Edgar" and the sad sack police force of May 10, 1924, has blossomed into the pride of a nation which once maintained that law enforcement was a strictly local problem and no business of Washington's bureaucrats.

In honor of his silver anniversary as head man of the federal bureau of investigation, director Hoover reviewed the FBI story and told how it all began.

It is a story of politics, good and bad, of an era that created a new enforcement approach, and of a criminal punk with a machine gun and a smart wife who did a million dollar publicity job for the FBI. Above all it is the biographical tale of an unimportant federal employe who took an unimportant appointment in 1924, and, without changing jobs, has become one of Washington's and the nation's most potent figures.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Is there anything I could put on my aluminum outdoor clothes line so that black smudges can be kept off the clothes? Even after thorough wiping it is possible to rub "black" off the line.

ANSWER: After thorough cleaning, rinsing and drying, give the line a coat of good spar varnish. To get an even coat, saturate a piece of cheesecloth with the varnish and wipe it on the wire. Since there will be a great deal of friction, the varnish gradually will wear off, and the treatment must be repeated. Instead of all this fussing, why not use a good cord clothesline, to be taken down and put away when not in use?

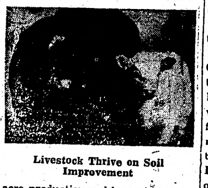
BUMPER BEEF AND FIELD CROPS BUILD FARM PROSPERITY

CHICAGO—Peacetime prosperity of Midwestern agriculture will depend not on the size of the farm operated, but on the crop yield per acre, a statement by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out.

"That includes the meat output from beef cattle, and the dairy production from milk cows as well as the yield from grain and field crops," the statement declares.

"In the competitive years ahead, the advantage will lie with the farmer who is able to boost his per acre production and lower his costs.



Livestock Thrive on Soil Improvement

"War time experience has taught farmers the value of adequate fertilization.

"The farmer's peacetime production program will be greatly aided by the fertilizer industry which is ready to meet his postwar needs."

Pretty Pears

A LITTLE girl who liked to know all about things was listening with great interest while her mother told her about the habits of birds. They ate grain, yes; they ate crumbs, yes, she had seen them eat crumbs; and they ate fruit—

"But mother," the little girl interrupted, "how do they open the cans?"

Whereupon, no doubt, the mother explained, how the bird gets up even earlier than the canner to get the prettiest fruit it can find. But it is an early bird, indeed, who can beat the canner to the choicest fruit, for this, in most cases, is especially grown for the canneries so that it may be grown under the best conditions and harvested when it is at its ripest and best.

Canning Beauty

Take pears, for example. Pears are a fruit with a long and honorable history, yet they have received less attention from recent generations than many other fruits probably because of the poor keeping-quality of fully-ripened fresh pears. Even though we pick them when they are a beautiful, light golden yellow and bring them indoors and place them in a fruit dish, it is only a short time before they begin to deteriorate.

How different they look after a short time off the tree, from the pretty firm, yet tender, white pears that we are familiar with when we open the can. The delicate flavor of the canned pear is perfectly retained because it has not been allowed to become over-ripe before picking.

It is this delicate flavor which makes it blend with other fruits so that it has become one of the most popular for use in fruit cups, salads and fruit desserts. In the dish on the table, as well as on the branch of the tree we hear the same term used—"pretty pears."

Great Clock of Strasbourg

One of the most unusual clocks in the world is the great clock in the Cathedral of Strasbourg, France. This clock not only tells the hour and the positions of the heavenly bodies, but also points to the day of the month, according to the World Book Encyclopedia. Below the dial which tells the time of day is a procession of gods and godesses which show the days of the week. Quarter hours are struck by figures on the clock, one of which turns an hourglass. At noon each day a procession of the apostles appears, while a cock above crows three times.

Wheat for Breakfast

Wheat made its debut as a breakfast cereal when the caveman found wild wheat growing as he prowled his way through the primitive world. A tentative tasting of the kernels of the wild wheat converted him into a cereal eater, and it turned him into a farmer, too. So well did the caveman like the wild wheat that he stored it against the winter's famine.

Macaroni was so popular in George Washington's time that the name became a byword for anything good or excellent (as in the old song, "Yankee Doodle" . . . stuck a feather in his hat and called it "macaroni".

Veterans Bonus Proceedure

Application blanks will be available Oct. 1 in veteran posts throughout the country. After they have been completed they are to be returned to the county Service in Warren, for checking and processing and then forwarded to the St. Paul office. It is hoped by this procedure to reduce over 50% of error which has been prevalent in many states. A claims examiner from the State Office will be with each county service officer to help check the claims.

The various posts in the county are asked to furnish volunteer workers who will be willing to furnish their services free. The Attorney General has ruled that certified copies of the discharge with the bonus application are necessary. All veterans who do not have certified copies already are asked to contact the county service office with their original discharge and certified copies can be secured from the county service officer at absolutely no charge to either the veteran or the county.

Applications for the next of kin of diseased veterans will also be available.

The application for bonus will be considered for a period of 15 months, from Oct. 1, 1949 to Dec 31, 1950.

Integrity and Contracts

One of the qualities in human beings that our civilization today needs so desperately is integrity. What is integrity? The word comes from a Latin term which meant "untouched" or "whole." That's about the way it is today. A man who has integrity is so morally sound that he is not to be touched —in a way that will affect his honesty and uprightness.

Many labor-management disagreements would disappear, if we honestly would undertake to solve them with each side of the conference table keeping its integrity. If each party to an agreement keeps his word—that is integrity. It used to be said of a neighbor I had: "His word is his bond." That's the kind of neighbor this world needs. It will require integrity from each one of us, if this world is to become a better place.

An Example

Let me illustrate—with a labor-management example. Less than a year ago, the General Motors "cost of living" wage agreement with United Automobile Workers was acclaimed as a solution to the frequent wage battles that upset our industrial communities.

Under terms of the contract GM can raise or lower wages according to government statistics. As living costs rise or fall in reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the company can adjust wages accordingly. While the formula did not rule out wage increases for other reasons, it was an honest attempt to solve the cost-of-living problem.

Pay Cut Due

Last year under the contract GM employees got a flat 6-cent hourly raise, plus a "cost of living" increase of 5 cents. What are the prospects this year? Employees are in line for an increase not related to living costs, but under the formula will get a pay cut of 2 cents because the Bureau of Labor Statistics index of living costs has gone down. The effect would be to hold wages at about the same levels as last year.

Employees still would have the advantage of the decline in living costs. However, according to a recent Associated Press dispatch, a GM local in Cleveland wants to reopen the contract, which has more than a year to run. This local of 2,500 workers wants UAW headquarters to block the carrying out of the contract. According to the AP story the local's president said that workers' living conditions "ought to be of greater meaning than the sacredness of a contract."

Moral Issues

Moral issues are involved when you talk about breaking contracts. As against a pay increase of two or three cents, a contract should have plenty of sacredness. What is involved is integrity. The contract was made in good faith. It has more than a year to run. If it does not meet the needs of the UAW, the parties will have determined this by the time for expiration. There are few human relationships that have greater meaning than do contracts. The courts of the land expect contracts to be kept. Good neighbors are made by men who keep their word. This applies to groups as well. Good citizenship requires integrity.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

British Ask Special Loan Favors; Senate Rejects Economy Measure; GI's Apply for War Risk Rebates

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BRITISH LOAN:
True to Form

Even before the talks got fully underway, the trend of the discussion concerning British-American finance deals was becoming familiarly clear.

THE PROBLEM was Britain's current financial crisis. The hope rested with U. S. procedure as it affects assistance. That the U.S. was thoroughly under the spell of British need and persuasion was shown in the statement that this government is hospitable to a proposal to relax terms of the British loan pact.

Under the current preliminary proposal, the U. S. would grant Britain permission to discriminate temporarily against American goods. Under the British loan pact, Britain got 3.75 billion dollars from the United States in return for a promise to treat American exports the same as those from British empire countries and Europe.

Now, the British want that requirement knocked out. Here's how the British plan would work:

BRITAIN could, for instance, refuse to license British buyers who want to buy American goods, but it could give "open licenses" to Britishers who, for example, wanted to import Italian goods. Since the Italian imports could be purchased with sterling, this would save Britain dollars.

Thus, with the monetary talks hardly underway, the British are asking a double burden of the American taxpayer—money from the taxpayer to solve Britain's economic problem while at the same time setting up what amounts to a boycott of American imports which will further cost the American taxpayer if he happens to be one of the businessmen affected by the ruling.

And, as the pattern seems to be, officials were reported favorable to the British proposal and — symptomatically, too—were planning to by-pass congress in implementing that approval.

WATCHMAKING:
Pioneered in U. S.

Many Americans believe precision watchmaking is an exclusively Swiss craft. Hence the small but lusty U.S. jeweled watch industry delights in pointing out that basic production methods now used by the Swiss were developed here a century ago, and that this "American system" was adopted by the Swiss about 1875.

Two years ago American craftsmen proved they hadn't lost their ingenuity. An Elgin, Ill., watch manufacturer introduced a rustproof, acid-proof "durapower" mainspring which was called the most revolutionary advance in watchmaking since introduction of jeweled bearings 200 years ago.

Now by way of improving on perfection, the same factory announces its technicians have learned how to squeeze every last ounce of power out of the wonder-alloy mainspring.

Their method was to eliminate the conventional annealed arbor end of the spring, which had always been dead, unproductive weight. By pre-forming the arbor end, possible only with the new alloy, they have put the entire length of the spring to work. The result: A longer run of the watch between windings, hence a boon to lazy and forgetful thumbs and forefingers!

DIVIDEND:
Rebate for GI's

The federal government, in one of the most amazingly simple forms ever to come out of Washington, was receiving applications from World War II veterans for rebates on GI insurance premiums.

REJOICING over the windfall, surprised and delighted with the simple application form, veterans were flooding the mails with their application cards.

The dividend payments from national life insurance surplus funds are to be made to persons who hold or have held these policies. The average payment is estimated at $175. To be eligible for a rebate, the veteran must have had his service life insurance in force at least 90 days. The dividend would not be issued on any service life insurance issued after December 31, 1947.

Touched Off Probe

Cedric Worth, special assistant to Navy Undersecretary D. A. Kimball, is shown as he appeared before the house committee investigating the B-36 bomber program. It was Worth who touched off the probe. He admitted writing the document containing serious charges against Defense Secretary Johnson and former air force secretary Symington.

SPENDING:
Slash Rejected

The United States senate stood firm in support of President Truman's estimate of the financial needs of the nation for the next fiscal year.

A move to force the President to slash federal spending to a level 5 to 10 per cent below his advance estimates was defeated. But the margin was only three votes.

The economy amendment, had it carried, would have required the President to hold spending for the current fiscal year some two billion to four billion dollars below the estimates he made last January.

FOES of the proposed economy asserted it amounted to passing the economy buck to the President. Supporters of the amendment answered that the President was in better position than anyone else to determine where to cut.

After the decision on this issue, the senate passed by a voice vote a 14.30 billion dollar appropriation bill to pay for national defense—the cost of the army, navy and air force. This was 500 million less, however, than President Truman had asked.

IN OPPOSING the economy rider, Sen. Scott Lucas, majority floor leader, said the amendment was a "political gesture," an attempt to tell the President to do what congress lacked the courage to do. He asked if economy supporters would "impeach him" if Mr. Truman failed to save as much as ordered.

On the contrary, contended Senator McClellan of Arkansas, "it is sound legislation necessary in the public welfare, and failure to balance the budget or hold the deficit to the minimum this amendment makes possible may well prove to be a stupid and dangerous blunder."

TELEVISION:
Color Must Wait

For those who want color in television, there were four more years of waiting.

That was the expressed conviction of a television manufacturer, Benjamin Abrams. He said that while color television had been demonstrated successfully, "it still is in the laboratory stage and it will be years before it is available for the general public." He then estimated the waiting time as four years.

Abrams said that at the present stage of development of color television, he did not believe manufacturers could turn out adapters for less than $300 to $500. And he estimated a set built especially for color would cost $1,000.

He declared present sets would not become obsolete even with the advent of color. But he said widespread interest aroused by the FCC exploration of color television was causing some prospective customers to postpone buying sets.

Abrams took issue with charges that manufacturers are deliberately holding back color video. He declared it would be in the manufacturers' own interest to bring out color sets quickly if they could produce them at prices within range of the general public.

Summing up he said: "You can't push a button and have color television appear over night."

HITLER AIDS COUNTERFEITERS

International Ring Floats Bogus Bills

The dead hand of Adolf Hitler reached out to assist one of the biggest international counterfeiting networks in history. The ring was reported to be flooding New York and South America with bogus bills. And all the experts agreed the bills were printed on plates Adolf Hitler ordered made to enrich his wartime over-seas sabotage funds. Scotland Yard indicated hundreds of thousands of bills have been passed.

Yard officials said the counterfeit ring's members may include both international criminals and former Mayfair society playboys "now living in luxury in the south of France."

More than $120,000 worth of forged U. S. dollar bills were recovered in little more than a week.

Cleaning Rings

Nearly any kind of ring is best cleaned with a toothbrush. Soap and water will do the job unless the ring is badly tarnished, in which case try using bicarbonate of soda. Just dip the damp brush in the bicarb and scrub the ring; rinse when finished.

Self-Watering Plants

If you have to go off and leave them for a few days, plants can be made to water themselves. Set a pan of water next to the plant and place a strip of flannel with one end in the water, the other wrapped around the base of the plant. Through the principle of osmosis, enough moisture will be conveyed from the pan to the plant to keep it alive.

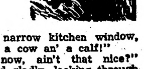
No Land is Free



By W. T. PERSON

Andy, Kate, Hope and Dave Ives, together with Granny, move to a homesteading area in Arkansas where they meet trouble in the persons of Sig Flanagan, Sheriff Martin and Sam Bragg, game warden, all of whom are hunters resenting the fact that Andy's home was used formerly by them as a hunting lodge. A doe is killed by one of the hunters and planted on Andy's land so that it can be found at the proper time and he will be jailed. It is illegal to kill a doe and Andy has no hunting license for any game hunting. Sam Bragg comes to arrest him but when he goes to show Andy where the doe is, it has disappeared. Andy is told that Deefy, a negro idiot, stole it for food.

CHAPTER XII

"You're sleepy, Hope," Mrs. Craig said abruptly. "Better get off to bed."

"I'm not so sleepy," Hope objected. "Just thinking."

Granny sniffed knowingly, nodded. "You can think in bed as well as you can sitting up, and you can rest while you're at it." And, with a teasing smile, "If you're worrying over having to learn to milk, I'll ask the Halleck boy to give you a lesson in the morning."

Hope viewed her grandmother narrowly. At times the wise old lady seemed to be gifted with clairvoyance! "Please don't bother," she said primly. "I prefer to be a self-taught milkmaid!"

Harley Webster roared over early the next morning in his truck. With him were the Darnleys, Mr. Buckley, and Mr. Wallace. All brought tools of one kind or another, and they were in jovial, industrial mood. The older Darnley was enjoying his morning dip—or "lip"—of snuff, and Will was pleasantly walloping a quid of plug about in his large mouth.

"Well, here we are, Ives!" Mr. Webster called in his raspy voice. "Ready for work an' rarin' to go!"

"I'm rarin' too," Andy said. He felt a glow deep within him for these men. They were pitching in without promise of pay, to help a stranger get established! Work and the prospect of failure and the hope of success were the bonds between them. They were openhearted, open-minded; they wanted nothing from him but his unspoken promise to share their lot as modern pioneers.

"Got a list of things you want from town?" Harley asked. "We'll go right in, you an' me, an' fetch the stuff out."

"No messin' around, either," Mr. Wallace drawled. "Sooner we git this place fixed up, the sooner we can have the housewarmin'."

"Aw, don't skeer him off right at the fust!" old man Darnley warned, pretending to be gruff. "Idea is to do the work an' git him good an' grateful, then pop it to him. He may fire us all, now, 'fore we can drive a nail!"

Andy laughed. "We'll have the warmest housewarming a family can give!" he promised happily. "Let's get on to town, Harley."

"Wait'll we unload our well-drivin' rig," Will Darnley said, "an' find out where you want it set up."

"An' we'll be levelin' up the ground for the foundations for the new room," Mr. Buckley said. "Don't git in too big a hurry, friend Ives, to go off an' leave yore help with nothin' to do."

Dave had noted with relief that Mr. Webster had left his wife and Oreen at home. But this feeling of escape ended when Harley informed Mrs. Ives that Birdie an' 'Reen would be over after a while to help get dinner ready for the crowd.

"But there are three of us women here," Kate said. "Mrs. Webster and Oreen don't need to come to help."

Dave Is Teased About Oreen

"That's all right, perfectly all right," Harley Webster said with air magnanimous, "an' don't you worry 'bout it. Birdie just loves to help people. Gives her a chance to talk, I reckin. An', course, she couldn't go off an' leave 'Reen there by herself."

Dave groaned inwardly and began dreading the noon meal. How could he eat if the short, busy-eyed girl sat across the table studying him like some creature in a zoo! He would wait! Often, when they had had a lot of company on Sunday, he had eaten at the second table.

But, no, that wouldn't work! The men would fill the first table, and he would have to eat with the women!

Bigelow Halleck came with the cow shortly before the truck had returned from Newcastle. She was a sleek, gentle animal—

"Just her second calf," he said rather proudly, nodding toward the frisking, tan-and-white offspring that trailed its mother. "Never been touched with a stick."

"We'll take good care of her," Dave promised. "How do you like her looks, Granny?" he called. Hope had stopped in the door, although she really didn't believe Big would think she was coming out to see him rather than the cow.

They put the cow into the little pole-built lot, and fastened the calf in a stall of the barn. "Maybe have a little milk for you tonight," said Big, "but it'll take a day or two for her to get used to the new place."

Dave shucked a dozen ears of corn and gave the Jersey the husks to chew on. She seemed contented enough, although restless and very inquisitive. Maybe a little playful too, for she shook her head at Dave and blew loudly through her wide nostrils before she accepted the corn shucks that he had dropped as he had jumped back.

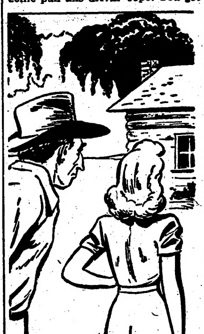
"She won't hook anybody!" Bigelow said, laughing shortly. "You don't know much about cows, do you?"

"Never fooled with 'em," Dave confessed.

"She's a nice, young cow," Granny said with an air of knowing.

"Well," said Bigelow, "you won't get more than two and a half gallons from her when she's at her peak, but it'll be the richest milk you ever saw."

"Hey, Big," Will Darnley yelled, "stop braggin' 'bout yore cow an' come pull this drivin' rope. You got to pay now for the water you may drink from Andy Ives' well."



Hope turned abruptly and headed back into the house. As she went she felt his gaze boring into her back.

The young man grinned good-naturedly and went to join the Darnleys. The pulley creaked querulously as with one big hand he pulled the weight up and dropped in onto the persimmon block atop the well pipe.

"You're a good man, son," said old Mr. Darnley. "Wish I could call back fifty years. I was pretty stout, myself, back then."

"Bet you were," Big agreed. "I just hope that when I'm your age I'm as good a man as you are."

"It takes snuff, boy! No other way. Hard work an' strong snuff."

Mr. Webster was riving out shingles. His frow "whished" dryly through cypress billets, and each fresh shingle rattled with almost metallic clearness as he tossed it onto the growing pile.

Mr. Wallace and Mr. Buckley were leveling up the foundation for the new room. Andy and Dave had little to do except serve as general flunkies.

At ten thirty Mrs. Webster and Oreen came. Dave was helping the Darnleys. Bigelow Halleck had gone home. Mrs. Webster accorded the menfolk a reserved and ladylike "Mornin'," and hastened past them to the cabin. Oreen lagged behind, though, and attempted to make a detour that would carry her close to the Darnleys and Dave.

"Oreen!" Mrs. Webster, called from the doorway. And, sweetly: "Come on in the house, honey. There's a heap to do."

"Yes'm," Oreen agreed. "I'm comin'. Hello, Dave. You workin' hard?"

More Rumors About Halleck

"Helpin'," Dave said. With a swift glance he noted that her dress was still too tight, and that her patent-leather pumps were still too small. "We're drivin' a well," he added, then seized the rope and tugged with uncommon fervor.

She went on in, but not without stopping in the narrow doorway to cast a lingering look at the boy.

Old man Darnley spat noisily, but thoughtfully with the wind. "That gal likes you, boy," he said with a sly wink. "You ought to set up to her. She's pretty as a little red hen!"

Dave turned redder than such a hen. "Aw, shucks!" was all he could think to say. This, obviously, wasn't what he should have said, for the old man and Will broke into rough laughter.

"O ma!" Oreen cried, turning from the narrow kitchen window, "they got a cow an' a calf!"

"Well, now, ain't that nice?" Birdie said gladly, looking through the window. "Where'd you all find that nice Jersey?"

"Is it a bull calf or a heif—?" Oreen began.

"'Reen!" Birdie cut in, shocked to an almost squeaky tone. "Ask if it's male or female. What is it, Miz Ives?"

"Why, I don't know," Kate answered. "I haven't thought to ask."

"It's a heifer—I mean, a female," Granny called.

"Where'd you git the cow?" Mrs. Webster persisted.

"Bigelow Halleck brought her out this morning. We'll milk her for feed and keep."

"Oh—ummmm!" Birdie Webster said, and looked secretly moved. The "ummmm!" had been a sort of brake to stop the words that had almost popped out. "Well, I do say!" She looked through the open door at Hope, who was sweeping up the hearth.

Granny caught the look and knew that Mrs. Webster was fairly expiring with the desire to say more. "It was very nice of the young man," she said pleasantly, by way of giving Birdie a cue.

Mrs. Webster sniffed and looked at the old lady sadly. "Well, some might think it was nice," she said, and folded her thin arms.

"Why wouldn't others?" Kate asked. "He seems very nice."

"Well, now, that all depends. I always say, give the devil his due." She shook her head sadly. "I told you all about Big. He'd 'a' been all right if it hadn't been for that Virgie Winslow."

"Still," Kate said, "I can't see how his experience with her would make it wrong for us to accept the cow from him."

"No, ma'am, I ain't sayin' you done wrong. It's—it's—Well, you see, if a young man that thinks the way Big thinks about 'gals now, after the way that one broke his heart, offered us a cow, Harley an' me might think he had interior motives."

"Ulterior motives," Granny corrected her. "You mean you'd think he had a dark, hidden purpose in being generous?"

"I mean interior motives," Birdie stated with a quick glance into the main room. "That means the motives is inside him, an' that he's keepin' them to hisself." She lowered her voice a little. "We might think he was after our little 'Reen!"

Hope almost ran out the front door, to get out of sight. She had to laugh. The idea of Bigelow Halleck showing any interest in chunky little Oreen made her want to whoop and cackle. Added to this was the implication that he had brought the cow and calf as a subtle move to make Hope the slave of his heart!

At that point another person arrived on the scene. When Hope, trying to control her laughter, saw him, he was looking at her intently. He was gaunt and dark, with black hair that needed cutting and black, quick eyes. His face was thin, bluish with stubble; his nose was thin and crooked, suggesting that someone had struck it with considerable force at one time or another; his mouth was narrow and thin-lipped, and his chin receded.

He was standing near Harley Webster, who called out: "Miss Hope, this is Hank Butler. He come to help too."

Hank Joins Others Lending a Hand

"Hello," Hope said, and wished he would stop staring.

"—to meetcha," Hank Butler mumbled, touching the limp brim of his black felt hat. He tried a smile, but it was more a grimace than an expression of mirth or greeting. "Looks like you all got a crowd already," he said.

Hope nodded. "Everyone's being awfully nice. I don't know whether Dad has something you can be doing or not. He's around back, with Mr. Buckley and Mr. Wallace."

Hope turned abruptly and headed back into the house. As she went she felt his gaze boring into her back.

"Oh, there's Hank!" Oreen said happily. "You ought to hear him play the guitar! He can fairly make it talk!"

"Lordy, yes!" Birdie agreed. "Him an' Mr. Flipp is a whole orchestry all by theyselves!"

The work went fast that day, and by sundown Mr. Webster had a pile of fine shingles riven; the well pipe had been driven twenty feet down; and the extra room was framed. Dave had successfully managed to eat at the first table, with the men, but even then, he hadn't escaped Oreen. She had helped with the serving, and every time she brought food to the table she had leaned over Dave's shoulder to set the dish down; and with every leaning she had brushed his shrinking shoulder lightly, and perhaps a trifle lingeringly.

Brother Cowann came the next morning, more to give his blessing to the varied project than to offer aid.

"My race for life against a Rattler's Poison!"

1 "A piercing shriek cut the silence as I lay in wait for deer in the Laguna Mountains near San Diego. I dashed to Sam Reardon, my hunting companion. A 3½-foot rattler had dug his fangs into Sam's ankle! Twice in my own life, I'd felt the rattler's sting. I knew what to do.

2 "I shot the rattler—opened my snake kit. Night was closing in. I needed light—good, steady light. My flashlight with its 'Eveready' batteries was the answer. By its light, I made a tourniquet, cut a cross incision and removed the venom.

3 "And those long-life 'Eveready' batteries gave plenty of bright light as I carried Sam and flagged a car. I thank my flashlight for saving Sam's life. Now I know why 'Eveready' batteries are the batteries with 'Nine Lives'!"

Organic Matter Builds Soil Tilth, Ups Crop Output

CHICAGO—Pointing out that "no soil is any better than the way it is treated," the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee declared that good management methods are the farmer's best insurance for maintaining high crop yields.

"Soils overworked by constant cropping and underfed by failure to put back plant nutrients, lose their crop-producing energy," says the statement.

The cure for such soil ailments, says the committee, is a well-rounded management program. Here are suggested steps:

Loose, Well-Structured Soil Is a Better Storehouse for Plant Food and Water.

1—Sweeten acid soils with lime, according to tests.

2—Use a rotation that balances soil-building against soil-robbing crops.

3—Build up the organic matter supply by growing well-fed deep-rooted legumes and grasses. Put back manure and crop residues.

4—Feed the soil plenty of plant nutrients in the form of commercial fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash as needed.

5—Keep the soil home by contour cultivation, strip cropping and terracing, where necessary.

"Teaming together, these measures will build and maintain your soil," the statement points out.

Cost Cutting Soil Management Keeps Farm Profits High

CHICAGO — Farmers can keep 1949 net income high even if prices soften further, by using soil management methods that cut production costs of crops per unit, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in a statement issued here.

"While economists expect 1949 to be a good farm year," says the statement, "they stress the need for getting farm business in shape to meet competitive conditions.

"In competitive selling, the farmer who makes the most is the one who produces for the least. The way to get lower cost crop production is to make each acre produce as many bushels as possible. Then you can make money whether prices are high or low. Good soil management is the key.

"Good management pays best when it builds up all factors that contribute to soil fertility. You need the help of plant food. Fertilizer is a good buy in terms of farm produce. Besides plant food, you need to build good tilth and structure. You need good drainage and ventilation. Your soils need plenty of organic matter.

"Vital to any soil management program is a rotation that regularly includes deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa or sweet clover. Well-fertilized legumes and grasses build up the soil's organic matter supply, add to the nitrogen content and improve structure and tilth."

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Sure You Haven't A "Blind Spot"?

As I was driving down Main Street last Saturday, another car swung out right in front of me. It turned out to be Buck Blake. He wasn't going fast. It was just that he had something else on his mind at that particular moment.

Buck's really one of the nicest fellows I've ever known. But, sometimes he gets to day-dreaming on the road. He sort of gets a "blind spot" to what's going on about him!

It could be anything from daydreaming while driving a car to humming out loud at the movies.

From where I sit, it's mighty important to be on guard against your own "blind spots." The other fellow has a right to his "share of the road," too—whether it's having a taste for a temperate glass of sparkling beer or a desire to listen to some classical music if he wants to.

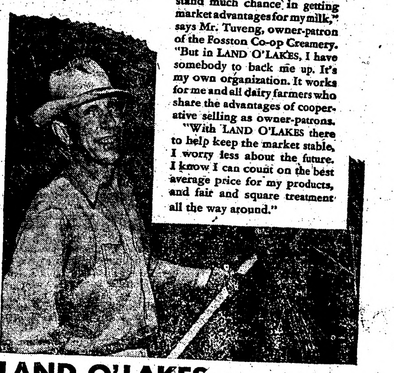
Where Every Farmer Gets The Same Square Deal



"As an individual, I wouldn't stand much chance in getting market advantages for my milk," says Mr. Tuveng, owner-patron of the Fosston Co-op Creamery. "But in LAND O'LAKES, I have somebody to back me up. It's my own organization. It works for me and all dairy farmers who share the advantages of cooperative selling as owner-patrons.

"With LAND O'LAKES there to help keep the market stable, I worry less about the future. I know I can count on the best average price for my products, and fair and square treatment all the way around."

Better Bees on Way

Bees that sting less, gather more honey and resist disease soon will be available as a result of new discoveries in breeding. Applying methods used in artificially breeding dairy cows and in producing hybrid corn, scientists have found ways to control queen mating. Thereby they are working to produce superior honey-makers—bees not so anxious to sting, and willing to work harder. They will also produce better pollinizers and bees more resistant to foulbrood.

Sanoden-Anderson Wedding

Miss Alice Marie Anderson became the bride of Mr. Russell C. Sanoden, formerly of Holt, at a double ring ceremony in St. Anthony Park Lutheran church, St. Paul, on Sept. 10, at 7:30 P. M. Rev. Alvin Lewis, officiating. The bride is a daughter of Missionary and Mrs. Palmer Anderson and the groom a son of Mrs. Mable Sanoden.

The bride, gowned in white net and lace, wore a fingertip veil and carried an arm bouquet. Her father being in China, she was given in marriage by her brother Frederick Anderson. Her attendants were her sister Carol Anderson as maid of honor Grace Anderson, her younger sister and Irene Vollan of Dawson a college classmate were bridesmaids. They wore identical gowns of pale colors and carried arm bouquets.

Douglas Swenseid of Lambert, Montana was Russels best man. Ushers were Cliff Grindeland and Richard Waug. All the men in the bridal party are pre seminary students, college friends of the groom.

Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. Sanoden wore crepe dresses in gray and brown respectively.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the church parlors for two hundred guests. Mrs. William Wittkowski, sister of the groom, poured.

Both the bride and groom are graduates of Concordia College at Moorhead. For the past year Alice Marie has been doing parish work at Yankton, S. D. The groom expects to enter Luther Seminary this fall.

Following a brief honeymoon Russell and Alice Marie will be at home at 2350 13th Ave. So., Minneapolis.

Michigan's Honey Crop

Michigan's 1947 honey production was estimated at 7,140,000 pounds, 29 per cent above the small 1946 crop of 5,500,000 pounds. According to the Michigan crop reporting service, the state's 1947 honey crop was produced by 204,000 colonies—a decrease of 8 per cent from the record 222,000 colonies a year earlier. Production per colony averaged 35 pounds, 10 pounds more than the record low average of 25 pounds in 1946.

Safety in Driving

One of the simplest ways to prevent automobile accidents is to drive a car that's kept in safe operating condition. Equipment items suggested as having special relation to safety are: headlights, tail and stop lights, brakes, tires, windshield wipers, steering and wheel alignment, the muffler and exhaust system, the windshield and other glass, the rear-view mirror and horn.

Aluminum Roofs Boost Productivity of Hens

Recent tests have shown that, because buildings with aluminum roofs are cooler in summer than those roofed with other materials, egg productivity in aluminum-roofed poultry houses is higher than in houses with other types of roofs.

The cooler interiors of aluminum-roofed buildings stem from the high reflectivity of the metal to both light and heat.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Plumps for Brannan Plan; Union of European Nations Urged; Publicity Asked in Dollar Parley

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FARM AID:

No "Setups"

Whatever else his critics might say of President Truman, they couldn't charge him with picking any "setups" when he sets out to do battle. The President has a faculty, it seems, for jumping quickest to the defense of measures and proposals that have the least public support.

THIS was the case in the President's latest taking-up-of-arms for controversial causes. He espoused the Brannan plan of farm price supports in a speech at Des Moines. He warned that the nation faces unmanageable and costly crop surpluses, and urged a "modernization" of the farm price support system on the basis of the Brannan production-subsidy program.

This is an issue which promises to be one of the liveliest in the 1950 congressional elections, and if the President was aiming to beat his opponents to the punch on the issue, he had succeeded.

The President's recommendation was made in the face of disagreement among his own congressional leaders as to the best farm price subsidy program to adopt and organized opposition by many farmer groups against the Brannan plan.

MR. TRUMAN called the Brannan plan the most "promising method yet suggested," but left open the possibility that some other system could be substituted.

The Brannan plan is one, briefly, wherein prices on practically every farm commodity would be left to find their own level on the market with the government paying a subsidy to farmers in the form of the difference in price between what farm products brought on the open market and the established parity price.

Opponents of the plan point out that while the consumer might appear to be saving money on cheaper market prices for farm products, he would, in reality, be saving nothing, inasmuch as it would be his money that would be paying for the subsidy to the farmer.

COMMANDER:

Some Dispute

Amid charges that he was the candidate of the "kingmakers," and was under the domination of the old line leadership, George N. Craig, 40-year old Indiana attorney was elected commander of the American Legion. He was the first World War II veteran to be chosen for the post.

THE 3,344 delegates to the Legion's Philadelphia national convention gave Craig an overwhelming majority on the first vote. Craig's opponents took the rostrum at nominating time to label him the choice of those they claim always select the organization's national commander.

ELECTION of officers climaxed convention sessions in which the Legion urged continuation of aid to China, adopted a resolution asking the U.S. to curtail "as far as possible" any further immigration at the present time.

HIGHWAYS:

Rough Going

Thirty-four of these United States need 20 billion dollars worth of work done on their roads.

This huge highway repair bill, forecast by Senator O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) was disclosed after a nationwide survey of road needs.

THE PICTURE was not as dark as it seemed. O'Mahoney pointed out the condition will serve as a backlog which "will afford an unmeasured market for business and industry."

He declared that everyone is aware of the depreciation of the American road system during and following the war, but added that "few, I am sure, appreciate the tremendous backlog of essential work which has piled up."

As chairman of the congressional joint economic committee, the senator recently sent inquiries to governors and highway authorities in every state to determine their highway construction and repair needs.

HE REPORTED 40 states had responded and that of those, 34 indicate an accumulation of highway deficiencies which would require the expenditure of 20 billion dollars or more.

The information obtained has been turned over to the U.S. bureau of public roads.

Tito's Envoy

EUROPE:

Stronger Ties

At Strasbourg, France, the council of Europe's consultative assembly called for creation of a union of European countries with real power in a limited range over the governments of member nations.

There are many students of world problems who are convinced this procedure is the only one which may eventually do away with war; but being realists, they concede that man has not progressed in selfless thinking to a degree where governments will agree to overall control of any kind or degree.

THUS it appeared the idea broached at Strasbourg was doomed at its inception, but men of goodwill must keep trying, no matter how difficult the task, if world peace is ever to become more than an illusory goal.

It has not been too difficult to get the best minds committed to a problem to see the way to its solution; the obstacle always has been that the individuals to whom the procedure must be entrusted fail in the scope and breadth of the wisdom necessary for solution.

So, when the 12-nation assembly meeting in France voted by an overwhelming show of hands for federal authority for the council of Europe, it was a manifestation of hope and desire, rather than any real accomplishment.

THAT the delegates were on good, solid ground is indicated by this portion of the resolution for federal authority:

"The government should undertake systematic instruction of the great mass of the people, pointing out to them the undeniable advantages of union for Europe and at the same time the dangers inherent in national isolation."

DOLLAR PARLEY:

Information, Please

Great Britain took the lead in stripping any secrecy from the progress of the critical conference on England's dollar crisis.

OFFICIAL SOURCES credited Sir Oliver Franks, the British ambassador, with a proposal that detailed daily reports be made in order to keep the American, British and Canadian people advised of developments.

This system of daily briefings has been followed at meeting of the Big Four council of foreign ministers in the past, although top-level international postwar financial conferences have been a bit more secretive.

The publicity problem was among the first which had to be ironed out by the principals in the monetary discussions, as decisions will have a vital bearing on reducing British dollar drain and bolstering her position.

THE PROPOSAL for daily briefings was said to have support from Dean Acheson, U.S. secretary of state, but the attitude of John Snyder, treasury boss, was unknown when the proposal was first broached.

The federal administration already had indicated congressional leaders would be kept informed on the progress of the conference.

The British proposed that officials of the three powers take turnabout in giving the briefings to the press.

'DIVORCEES ANONYMOUS'

Women Organize to Slow U.S. Divorce Rate

Unhappy because they felt that in too many cases they rushed to the divorce courts too soon, a group of Chicago women have formed a group which they hope will have some effect in slowing down the accelerating U.S. divorce rate.

They call their group "Divorcees Anonymous" and their major aim is to salvage other marriages which are headed for divorce.

The organization came into being as a result of an effort by Samuel Starr, Chicago attorney, to effect a reconciliation between an estranged couple. But a divorced woman who happened to be in his office at the time, was successful when she tried it. "I asked her to help me again," he said, "and before I realized it, 'Divorcees Anonymous' was born."

CLOAK & DAGGER:

Russian Wise Guy

It was beginning to appear—as pieces of the picture fell together—that Uncle Sam had been played more or less for a sucker by a Russian wise guy who pretended to be won over to the American ideology by the Voice of America broadcasts, and who wanted to come to America and be a United States citizen.

LAST October 9, two Russian air force lieutenants, Anatol Borzov and Peter Pirigov, landed in the U. S. zone of Austria in a stolen Russian bomber. They had had enough of Russia, they said, in effect, and would like to become U.S. citizens.

According to the Soviet Embassy, Borzov suffered a change of heart late in July and begged for "prodigal son" treatment. Meanwhile, U.S. agents had discovered the "change" and Borzov was arrested by U.S. agents and held secretly at Ellis island. Then he was flown to the U.S. zone of Austria and returned to Russian jurisdiction.

DURING the interim, Pirigov, who says he wants to stay in America, told newsmen that Borzov tried to bribe him with Soviet embassy funds to return to Russia. It was reported that Pirigov had been beaten by Soviet agents.

The one essential element to the chain of events as to whether it proved Borzov a spy was missing. That was confirmation. The U. S. state department would neither confirm nor deny any of the stories being circulated.

IT merely revealed that a U. S. note on the Borzov affair had been delivered to the Soviet embassy.

There is an old, old adage that it is "very easy to believe what one wants to believe." It may have been that sort of wishful thinking that led state department officials to smile benignly on Comrade Borzov's desire to "change" allegiance and become as one with Americans.

'FAIR DEAL':

Author Irked

President Truman continued in a fighting mood. He told newsmen he was going to keep Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan as his military aide—apparently despite anything the current "5 per center" probe might develop.

Then, setting the theme of the 1950 congressional campaign, he lashed out with a slashing attack at his recent pet aversion—"organized selfish interests" which, he asserts, are trying to block his fair deal program with a "scare-word campaign."

HE DECLINED to name the "selfish interests," still campaigned against the 80th ("do nothing" he called it) congress. Evidently, Mr. Truman felt he knew a good thing when he saw it. If he could be elected to the presidency—when few felt he had a chance—by campaigning against the 80th congress, campaigning against it again ought to do good for his side in 1950 ballot tests.

Getting away from the 80th for the moment, he talked about the 81st congress, declaring that the Democrat - controlled legislators had made progress with his Fair Deal program in the teeth of "trumped-up slogans" like "statism," "welfare state," "collectivism," and "socialism."

THE PRESIDENT said the people will not be disturbed by such "scare words" dreamed up by a "lot of paid agitators, promoters and publicity experts who make a fat living by frightening the people in the high-income groups about forward-looking legislation and by organizing campaigns against it."

NEW LOOK:

Next, the Male

The American male would be smart to move cautiously, for fashion designers have launched a movement to give men's clothes a "new look" every five years.

"The men's apparel industry is in bad shape," was the dim view of the situation expressed by Myron Kahn, executive director of national fashion previews of men's apparel, incorporated. He complained of no changes.

Steel Structures

A tall steel-structure building with a well-grounded metal roof—like many of our skyscrapers—is a lightning rod in itself. Such a building is struck frequently by lightning but the occupants usually are unaware of it except for a loud thunder crash.

Sump Pump

The sump pump is sometimes called a cellar drainer. It is a small but dependable pump which is placed in a sump or low point in the basement. It starts automatically when water in the sump reaches certain height.

New Plaster Needs

Unfinished plaster needs a special coating of size or primer-sealer before a paint coating is applied. Paint of the water-thinned type can be put on without such a preliminary coating.

Farm Entrance

Most farm families prefer to have visitors use any door but the kitchen door. An entrance facing the driveway and a parking area for cars near the entrance will make this possible.

Enamelware

Because enameled utensils have a smooth, non-porous glass coating, home economists recommend them for preparing, storing and reheating foods. The glass-on-steel construction of enamelware prevents it from absorbing food odors.

Sea Horse

The sea horse is not a horse, but a strange kind of fish that is so small it can be held in the hand. It is called a sea horse because of the queer shape of its head and its long snout.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, including Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, take a home given free to homesteaders who will cultivate the land for the state. Immediately trouble arises since Andy's home was formerly used as a hunting lodge. The hunters, Sig Flanagan, Sheriff Martin and Game Warden Sam Bragg, attempt to implicate Andy in the illegal act of killing a doe, but Deefy, a negro idiot living in the extreme wilderness, upsets their plans by running off with the animal before it can be found on Andy's land. Big Halleck, a handsome young neighbor, offers the Ives a cow for milk. Birdie Webster, another neighbor, warns Kate about Big.

CHAPTER XIII

He was a tall, lank man with deep-set blue eyes, the long thin face of an idealist and reformer, and a chin that jutted both forward and sideways, throwing his face a bit out of line and seeming to give extra emphasis to his firm statements. He wore faded black.

"Well, well, and this is Brother Ives!" he said in a sonorous voice. "We have great joy in welcoming you to our community, suh."

"Thank you, Mr. Cowann," Andy said, wincing a little as the caller gripped his hand with powerful bony fingers. "We—"

"Brother Cowann," the preacher corrected him. "I do the work of the Lord out here among the donators, and I am a brother to all men. You must come and worship with us, Brother Ives, you and your dear ones."

"Well, when we get straightened around, I guess we'll be coming to church some," Andy said.

"Ah," a voice broke in, "good morning. How are you, Reverend Cowann?"

It was Mr. Eliot, who had arrived at a point behind the minister.

"Good morning, Eliot," Brother Cowann said in a grave, ringing tone. "How are you, sah?"

"Oh tolerable, I suppose," Mr. Eliot informed him. "Don't let me interrupt your visit with Mr. Ives. Just dropped over to see if I could help a little."

"A worthy move," the preacher said, and he turned back to Andy.

It was plain that Reverend Mr. Cowann had a marked distaste for Mr. Eliot. Andy had noted the lack of "Brother" in the greeting. Something unpleasant lay between those two; of that he was sure.

The work went fast now, and within a few days, the new room was completed, the new roof was on, the flooring had been put down.

On the day when the work was finished, Mrs. Webster, who had been loyal throughout, lending aid and endless conversation daily, said it would be a lot of fun at the housewarming.

"The floor's stout enough now fer the dancin'," she told Hope. "It'll be a good way fer you to meet the young set."

"We intend to have a warming," Hope told her, "but I don't know just what night."

"Why not Saturday night?" Kate asked. "The sooner, the better."

"You better find out if Hank Butler can be here, to play the gittar with Mr. Flipp. He plays all 'round, an' he may have his promise out fer Saturday night."

"I'll speak to Andy," Kate promised.

"An' you better git Pete Hoskins to call," Birdie suggested.

"To call what?"

"The sets, my goodness! You got to have a caller."

"Oh!"

Birdie rubbed a plate, for they were doing the dinner dishes, and studied Hope's profile with her probing eyes. "Is the Jersey givin' enough milk fer you all?" she asked casually.

"About enough. We get a little more each day. The calf takes some, of course."

"I reckin Big'll come to the warmin'."

Flipp Brings in Some Bad News

"Oh, I guess so. Everybody's invited to such things, aren't they?"

"Isn't he," Granny corrected her. "Watch your English, young lady."

"Isn't who?" Birdie asked, not catching the point of grammar.

"Oh, I just crossed up a singular and a plural," Hope turned it off, not wishing to explain. "Shouldn't we have Bigelow Halleck here for the occasion?"

"I'm not advisin' you one way or the other," Mrs. Webster said cautiously. "But—well, you do what you want to do about it."

"Are there many girls my age around here?" Hope asked.

"Not many. You see, when a girl gits your age out here, she marries an' tries to make herself worthwhile."

"Oh! Then one like me isn't much of anybody, is she?"

"Lordy, I didn't mean that!" And Birdie almost dropped a white saucer in her confusion. "I meant that there's so much to do, an' ever' man needs a woman helpin' him, an' them that don't help is wastin' theyselves. That's what I meant."

"My, it's certainly something to think about!" Hope said, cutting a look at Granny, who was contentedly churning before the fire in the main room.

"Hank'll like you," Birdie said bluntly.

Hope shuddered. "You think so?"

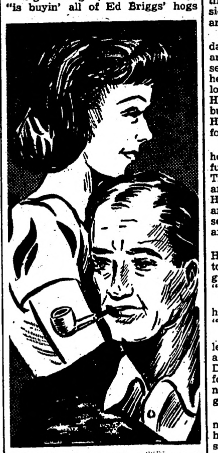
"I just bound you he will. An' they ain't many in this country anywhere that can pick the gittar like him, either. He played on the radio once."

"Is there a broadcasting station at Newcastle?"

"Yes. Him an' Mr. Flipp was on one Saturday night. Hank sung too. He's got an awful sweet voice. It pretty nigh makes you cry when he sings the one about the boy in jail, who had drove a cold, cold knife in the heart of his sweetie."

Mr. Flipp came late that afternoon with two items of interest. One was a bit of news he had picked up in town that day; the other had its source elsewhere.

"Sig Flanagan," he told Andy, "is buyin' all of Ed Briggs' hogs out here in the swamp. He tol' me he was puttin' a hundred more in these woods, an' he wants me to sort of look after 'em."



"If they'd brought much more meat," Andy said after the guests had gone, "I'd have to build a smoke house. They're sure good to us!"

"H'm!" Andy grunted, thinking hard. This was a bit of bad news, for he was already expecting trouble with the hogs next spring. It would be hard to deal with Sig Flanagan. "Will you see after them for him?"

"I tol' him I'd be too busy to fool with hogs. Then he said he'd give me all the fresh meat I could use durin' the winter, but I tol' him I'd keep on shootin' my fresh meat, as long as my trigger finger was workin'. He'll git somebody, though, to look out fer them hogs. Say, you know, these woods'll be a mess with another hundred shoats roamin' 'em!"

Hope Learns To Square Dance

"And think how it'll be when the sows have litters," Andy added. "We'll be overrun with hogs!"

"They'll have to be some tight fencin' done. Speakin' of litters, I'm goin' to have another batch o' pups on my han's."

"That so?" Andy glanced at the ribby Jessie Bell, now lying with Bugler near the end of the house. He wondered if Mr. Flipp would force another pup on him in due time. But that worry would have to wait its turn. It was, after all, only a minor complexity in the fascinating pattern of building their new lives in the swamp.

The housewarming was a great success from two standpoints. There was considerable loot in the way of fresh and cured meat, sweet potatoes, eggs, butter, canned fruit and vegetables, plus other palate-tickling trivia, such as homemade molasses candy, three poundcakes, and some pies; and there was a crowd, so that the Iveses met most of their neighbors. Fortunately, the evening was not too cold, so that everybody didn't have to pack into the house at one time. About a third of the men and boys remained outside, talking, smoking, and enjoying rough horseplay, and wandering into the house from time to time as some of the other guests came out.

Mr. Flipp and Hank Butler made the music, and Pete Hoskins called the sets in a piercing, nasal voice. What he lacked in melodious tone he made up in rhythm and volume.

Mr. Flipp was in his glory. He stood most of the time, a sad look on his narrow face, his bow working in swift, short strokes, his right foot patting out the time. There was no shading of loud and soft, very little variation of the swift tempo. Bright, clear notes fell from the jiggling bow, filling the room; it was the oldtime music of pioneer people. Some of the tunes had come to this country from England and Ireland, had comforted early settlers in Massachusetts and Virginia and accompanied their descendants in their migrations westward. There were tunes that once swirled upward among the sparks of campfires circled by covered wagons. There were tunes that had echoed earlier from Allegheny's cliffs. Tunes, rich with living, of a young, growing America.

Hank Butler's guitar throbbed beneath the voice of the fiddle, always chording, always ready for any change of rhythm. The guitar made a basket of sound for the fiddle notes to fall into, like bright, crackling sparks. Hank crouched over his instrument, fingering dexterously, the stub of a cold cigarette between his lips. He seemed tireless. During the brief intermissions, he rolled fresh cigarettes and smoked great draughts.

Often Hope found his intense, dark eyes on her during the music, and each time she felt a strange sensation of cold shivering along her spine. Once, to break his eyes loose from her, she smiled at him. He looked startled for an instant, but he did attempt to smile back. He struck his chords more loudly for several measures afterward.

Andy hadn't square danced since he was a boy, but he joined in the fun. So did Kate, under protest. The Websters were in their set, and Birdie was far more agile than Harley. Her expression of nervous anxiety seldom changed, for it seemed that she was mortally afraid of making the wrong move.

"Birdie's a awful good dancer," Harley bragged. "'Reen's good too," he added, glancing toward a group of younger ones, proudly. "Don't Dave dance?"

"Dave's too bashful to get out here and try it," Kate told him. "He'll learn sometime, I guess."

"Why, the boy ought to be learnin' now. He's big enough to be a-havin' some fun." He sought Dave out with his quick eyes and found him standing against the wall near the musicians. "Hey, Dave, grab you a gal an' swing do si do!"

Dave paled. He had feared this moment. A dry feeling, tight and hot at once, seized his throat. He shook his head.

"Oreen," Harley rasped in the tone of a man who will permit no unhappiness in his presence, "go drag Dave onto the floor an' make 'im dance. Gosha'mighty, he shore can't learn no younger!"

Oreen, a light in her eyes, started for Dave, but Dave, at the same moment, started for the door. "Got to see a boy," he called. And he disappeared in the darkness.

Hope caught on quickly to the intricacies of the square dance. She was in the set with Bigelow Halleck, at his invitation; and he proved to be a good teacher. The touch of his big, warm hand gave her an odd confidence, and at the same time another sensation that she couldn't quite describe. The nicest part came when Pete called "swing your partners," for she was as light as thistle when Big obeyed the command; and more than once he swung her completely off her feet. She had the feeling of flying, of flying in the safety of the strongest arms she had ever known.

But whenever she happened to look toward the musicians, she found Hank Butler's black eyes fastened on her; and every time she caught Birdie Webster looking her way, that meek and relentlessly apologetic person's eyes spoke shocked disapproval.

The Close of a Perfect Evening

Mr. Eliot and Granny sat watching the dancers, talking occasionally. Once, in a very courtly manner he asked if she would like to join in a set, but she thanked him and said it had been too long since she had square danced. Mr. Eliot laughed and said he never had.

So, for all but Dave it was a pleasant housewarming.

"If they'd brought much more meat," Andy said after the guests had gone, "I'd have to build a smokehouse. They're sure good to us!"

"And just think!" Granny put in, her fine face shining with the thought that had struck her. "If Gertrude and Wilton had sent for me to come and live with them, I'd have missed all this! Why, I've seen and felt more real living out here in this swamp than those two will ever know!"

"But you've less comfort in feeling it!" Kate said with a smile.

"Real living isn't all comfort. There are hard spots, and there are places where you feel there's no use trying any more; then, when you do keep trying and get past those places, you get a glory out of the smooth road you've won!"

It was a nice thought, and Granny's way of saying it sent a warm, chokey lump into Andy's throat.

Malaria Still Regarded Greatest 'Mass' Killer

Although malaria, mankind's greatest killer, no longer claims its toll among the world's great as it did before discovery of quinine, the disease still remains the "most important in the world from the standpoint of prevalence."

The yearly number of cases throughout the world is estimated at 600 million with 3 million deaths.

Even in the United States, between one and five million cases occur annually with an estimated 1200 deaths.

By claiming such figures as Alexander the Great, Lord Byron, Oliver Cromwell, King James I of England, and a dozen or more popes among its victims, malaria through the ages has enormously influenced world history.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: We have just moved into our new home. We were told to stain our kitchen cabinets and then wax them. After living in the house a month we found that the cabinets were becoming stained and marred by the water splashing on the wood. We would like to remove the wax and restain and then varnish them. Is there anything we can use to remove the wax from the cabinets without harming the wood?

ANSWER: Turpentine is a solvent for wax; use it liberally to remove all traces of wax. The liquid is inflamable, so ventilate the room while working and shut off all pilot lights and refrigerator. If you wish to apply another stain of the same color, this can go right on over the old one, although the second staining will make the color still darker. If you wish to lighten the color, you can apply a wood bleach, on sale at large paint stores.

Kidneys Must Work Well-
For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

Santos, Brazilian Port.

Santos, Atlantic coast port for Sao Paulo, was founded in 1543. In the downtown section of the Brazilian port narrow streets typical of a colonial city predominate, giving a picturesque air to this seaport. Air travel has brought Santos, which is also a seaside resort, within easy reach of North Americans.

Electricity Eases Farmstead Chores

EXTENSION of electricity to farms has made a new production tool available to agriculture, according to nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer. Electricity offers ways to mechanize many farmstead chores, reduce human labor, lower operating costs and promote better income, which adds up to more satisfactory living.

Since most of the appliances required for modern conveniences are operated by electricity, its employment in production makes it a dual-purpose tool, in which one use facilitates another, points out the magazine read by 1,250,000 farm families.

Typical of electricity at work is the task performed by a small circular saw in cutting material for the poultry house on George Middleton's farm in Kane County, Illinois.

One of the recent developments in labor-saving appliances is the churning attachment which Mrs. Henry Sidentop, of Livingston County, Ill., uses on her washing machine. Ice cubes made in her refrigerator go into the clothes tub to cool summertime cream, which reduces churning time by one-fourth.

An important function of rural electricity is to supply life-protecting heat for young pigs. Carl Barton exhibits one of the 7 brooders he built as a vocational agriculture project in Livingston County, Ill.

TOMATOES
With Red Ears

TOMATOES are generally conceded to have red cheeks—and the red ears go to good old American corn. Yet if tomatoes could hear all of the nice things housewives are saying about them, they'd surely grow red ears.

Tomatoes are some of the best friends of the housewife. They look pretty, and they taste good—and to top it all, they are very inexpensive. When she makes soup that needs flavor and color—"I'll add tomatoes," says she. When she makes a meat loaf which doesn't produce gravy—"I'll make a tomato sauce."

Gay and Good

In fact every dish on the menu, from soup to dessert, and not excluding breads—for there are even tomato breads in those modern days—can be enhanced by the addition of tomatoes.

Tomato salads are stimulating to look at and most delicious to eat—for parties, you'll like this delicious

Frozen Tomato Cream Salad: Cook gently for ten minutes the contents of three No. 2 cans of tomatoes with three slices of onion, a few grains of pepper, salt to taste and one tablespoon sugar. Press through a sieve. There should be two and one-half cups of purée as a result. Soften one and one-half teaspoons gelatin in two tablespoons cold water, dissolve in the hot purée, then cool. When it begins to get thick, add one-third cup of cream, whipped, and freeze in the refrigerator trays. Serve on lettuce. This serves eight persons.

RED CROSS HAS RECORD NUMBER SERVING U. S. MILITARY FORCES

With U. S. military forces at five times their prewar strength, a record number of American Red Cross workers are serving them throughout the world.

More than 2,000 Red Cross representatives today are stationed at 1,300 military installations and 123 hospitals here and overseas. About 1,400 staff workers are serving troops in this country. The others are working at occupation and defense posts abroad. Only during the peak years of World War II were a larger number on duty.

The duties of these Red Cross workers are as varied as the locale in which they work, involving a wide range of welfare services that contribute to military morale. They may include tiding over a soldier's wife with grocery and rent money until her family allowance check comes through, or getting a welfare report on an Eskimo serviceman's mother via weather bureau radio. Sometimes it means getting word of a family emergency to a sailor with the fleet in the Mediterranean.

Service of the Red Cross worker in a military hospital may be helping a man through the difficult hour when he learns that he will never be well again or removing the worry that often stands in the way of his recovery.

> Under federal statute and regulations of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, the American Red Cross furnishes volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of the armed forces and acts in matters of voluntary relief and as a medium of communication between the people of the United States and their armed forces.

In the last year Red Cross staff members handled more than 102,000 welfare cases in military hospitals. More than 500 professional Red Cross workers are stationed at 40 army hospitals, 26 navy hospitals, and 14 air force hospitals.

For the able-bodied, too, whatever the problem or wherever the serviceman is stationed, the chances are that the Red Cross has a field worker on the spot or nearby who can help try to solve it.

In this country 361 field directors and their assistants cover 148 base stations, 31 substations, and 923 itinerant stations. During the last year field directors at camps handled more than 672,000 cases. Health and welfare reports requested by servicemen or their families were the most common type of help asked for. More than 179,000 such cases were recorded. The next most frequent type of request was that involving leave or extension of leave. The Red Cross cannot grant leave, but military authorities depend upon the organization for reports of conditions underlying leave requests. These cases run into many thousands each year.

Abroad, Red Cross coverage is almost as complete as in this country. In Japan alone, 159 men and women are serving occupation troops at 31 military installations and 14 hospitals. Other parts of the Far East are equally well staffed.

In Europe, 248 Red Cross workers serve military personnel and their dependents at 51 military installations and 15 hospitals, most of them in occupied Germany. Coverage is also given in England and to miscellaneous units still in France.

"Land O'Lakes Gives Me The Help I Need"

...says EDWIN TUVENG
Fosston, Minn., dairyman

Where Every Farmer Gets The Same Square Deal.

"As an individual, I wouldn't stand much chance in getting market advantages for my milk," says Mr. Tuveng, owner-patron of the Fosston Co-op Creamery. "But in LAND O'LAKES, I have somebody to back me up. It's my own organization. It works for me and all dairy farmers who share the advantages of cooperative selling as owner-patrons.

"With LAND O'LAKES there to help keep the market stable, I worry less about the future. I know I can count on the best average price for my products, and fair and square treatment all the way around."

4-H Members Tour Mud Lake

150 4-H Club members, parents and friends toured the Mud Lake game refuge Sunday. Two guides lead groups through different parts of the refuge. After the tour the group met again at the main station. Here everyone had an opportunity to ask questions of the guide about the refuge. Particularly interesting was his explanation of the operation and purpose of the deer trap. About 70 moose and 12,000 deer are on the refuge now along with 60,000 ducks.

The tour ended with everyone enjoying a pot luck lunch. All those who attended the tour came away with a better understanding of the purpose and worth of this 66,000 acre refuge here in Marshall county.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sorum of Hillsboro, N. D. Mrs. Minnie Sorum of Hayward, Calif., Mrs and Mrs. Emil Rux, Mr. and Mr. J. M. Thorstad and family, Mr and Mrs. Roy Sorum and Susan of Thief River Falls visited at the John Sorum home Sunday.

Payton Made Head - New Plan

James R. Payton, for the past 15 years manager of the Bemidji District of the Otter Tail Power Company, has been promoted to Division Manager, a new position under a reorganization plan announced Saturday. Edward L. Beck, who becomes Peyton's assistant, will head the Bemidji District. Another newly created position, that of Division Engineer, has been filled by Melvin Sunby, who has been with the company since 1934. C. M. Carlson will continue as district manager at Crookston and W. C. Naylor will continue as manager of the Hallock District.

These appointments are coincident with a plan for centralizing certain functions of the Otter Tail Power Company's operation and decentralizing other activities, according to T. C. Wright, President.

The thirteen districts under which company operations are now maintained will continue as before, but additional control will be established through five divisions. Division headquarters, besides Bemidji, are Fergus Falls and Morris in Minnesota, and Jamestown and Devils Lake in North Dakota.

Most of the Power Company's billing will now be centralized in the Division offices. By freeing District Managers of large amount of detail, they will be in a position to spend more time in their district territories.

"One other end will be achieved by this plan," said T. C. Wright, "which is of importance to every Otter Tail customer. The appointment of a Division Engineer in each division is the first step toward increasing the size and number of district and division line crews. The decentralization will place more of our maintenance and construction people at strategic points throughout the system, which in turn means constantly improved electric service to our customers"

Mr. and Mrs. Arvid Wickstrom and family and Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Wegge and family enjoyed a fishing trip to Rainy River Sunday.

A Big Boost For Smitty!

Stepped into Smith's Department Store the other noon and saw the strangest thing. "Sis" Davis was coming up the stairs from the basement with a bundle of wash.

"Is Smitty taking in washing these days?" I asked. "Not quite," she says. "He's just put in a new automatic washing machine, so the girls who work here can get their laundry done while they're eating lunch. Means more time to relax at night and on weekends."

I thought what a swell boss Smitty must be. Human relations between the boss and employees have certainly taken a big step forward during my lifetime.

From where I sit, people seem to be doing a better job of seeing our neighbor's viewpoint these days. Though his ideas and tastes may not be ours, we can understand his preference for a certain breakfast cereal, a favorite movie star, or for a temperate glass of beer or ale. That's the way it should be in a free country.

Household Hints

Paint Stain Remover

To remove stale paint stains, try combining equal parts of turpentine and acetone, as long as the fabric involved is not acetate rayon, and use it as you would ordinary cleaning fluid.

Spots on Concrete

Oil spots on concrete often can be removed with cleaning fluid. If the spots are old, mix up a paste of cleaning fluid and Fuller's earth. Spread the paste on the spots and wait until it's completely dry before sweeping it off with a broom.

Plugging Leaks

Tiny leaks in fuel oil tanks and water boilers can be plugged by the amateur, temporarily, at least. Get a tiny "self-threading" metal screw; put it halfway driver; then seal it by rubbing through the leak with a screw-paraffin or candle wax under the head of the screw.

Ripped Shower Cap

When your shower cap rips just as you're trying to put it on and you haven't a spare, that's no time to sit down and weep about it. Act fast. Whip into the kitchen, get one of those elastic-bound transparent covers that go on refrigerator dishes, slip it over your tresses and carry on.

The Gopher State

"The Star of the North" is the motto of Minnesota. The moccasin flower is the state flower, while the unofficial bird is the American goldfinch.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Life in the wilderness proves difficult for the Ives family, Andy, his wife Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny. The worst angle is trying to pacify hunters, Sig Flanagan, Sam Bragg and Sheriff Martin who are angry because Andy's home was used formerly by them for a camping place. Neighbors help Andy and Dave clear the land and upon completion of the work, a housewarming is given at which everyone from nearby joins in a gala affair. Big Halleck, handsome young man who kindly loaned the Ives a cow, teaches Hope to square dance but she is disconcerted to find the eyes of Hank Butler, guitar player, constantly upon her even though he is liked by Oreen Webster.

CHAPTER XIV

"We've had more smooth road up to now than we'll have from this time out," he said. "The rains are coming, and the spring storms, the mosquitoes, and heaven only knows what else."

"Don't forget the clearing," Dave offered. "That has to come, or we won't have anywhere to plant things."

"Yes, the clearing," Andy said seriously. "I dread that!"

The weather remained cool and clear, with frosty, still mornings and hazy, still sunsets. Smoke from distant brush fires hung low on the horizon, and sometimes in the night, when the air was damp and heavy, the smoke was sharp enough to sting the nostrils.

It was Hank Butler who brought the turkey for Christmas, a big, long-bearded gobbler. He came late of an afternoon, carrying the handsome bird, head down, across his back. Andy and Dave were at the side of the house, sawing stovewood billets. Hope had just come out to the pump for a bucket of water.

"Thought you might like some turkey meat," he said to Andy and Dave, but watching Hope as she worked the pump handle. He laid down his load and brought out the "makin's" for a cigarette. "I shot 'im right through the head. Not another mark on 'im."

"Well, this is mighty nice of you," Andy said gratefully, noting with distaste how the caller's dark eyes watched Hope's every move. "We'll enjoy it."

"You mean it's a wild turkey?" Dave asked. "You shot it?"

"Oh, they's a good many wild turkeys in the swamp," Hank licked the cigarette paper by dragging it across his tongue. "You got to know how to hunt 'em, though. They're sharp." He struck a match on his belt buckle, cupped the blaze with both hands, and as he lit the cigarette he watched Hope across his hands.

Andy was thinking fast. This was not open season on wild turkey. That came in spring.

"You don't need to say nothin' 'bout having wild turkey fer Christmas, though," Hank told them. "I busted the law a little when I shot 'im. Burn the feathers when you git 'im dressed."

Dave and Andy exchanged quick glances. They had barely escaped trouble with Warden Bragg and knew that he was waiting to get something on Andy Ives. Yet he could scarcely refuse the turkey without offending Hank Butler.

"We shoot turkeys whenever we want 'em," Hank said, watching Hope as she went around the rear corner of the house, carrying the zinc bucket of water. "Dang Sam Bragg, anyhow! He's a meddlin' skunk! We folks out here don't like none of them low-down devils that call theyselfs the law in Newcastle."

"But they are the law," Andy told him. "I don't want to get into trouble with them."

"You're in trouble with 'em now. You got that way, just movin' out here." He nodded to Dave. "Take that gobbler in the house. When you git 'im dressed, ain't nobody can prove he's a wild one."

Kate came out, to thank the caller for his thoughtfulness and generosity. Granny called, "Ask him to stay for supper."

"No! Hope stage whispered, but Kate couldn't hear her.

Butler Brings A Holiday Gift

The outcome was that Hank Butler stayed. Probably he had arranged his arrival with that in mind. At the table, he had little to say. He bent low over his plate and brought food to his mouth with a minimum of motion. When he cut ham, he held his knife in his fist, like a dagger. He drank coffee black, having saucered it, and as he took in steaming draughts of it his eyes, as dark as the coffee, studied Hope. Finished with the meal, he carefully whittled a match stem with a sharp, long-bladed knife, and set to work on his stained teeth. His air was one of confidence—wasn't he Hank Butler, the best guitar picker in the swamp?

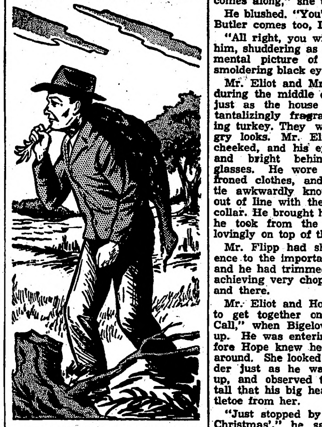
Hope tried not to notice that he watched her so much, but she remained nervously aware of his attention. Even when doing the dishes, dragging that chore out as long as possible, she felt his eyes on her, as he, Andy, Dave, and Granny sat about the fireplace in the main room. He talked little, nodding now and then in approval of something Andy said, or shaking his head vigorously in disapproval. Every time she glanced into the room, she saw the dark eyes studying her, and the play of the firelight on his thin face, dark and intense, gave it a touch of the sinister.

Kate saw and understood. "Don't pay him any attention," she whispered. "He's just a country boy who's much taken with a pretty, new girl in the community."

"Ugh!" Hope groaned in revulsion.

At Granny's suggestion, Hank Butler helped with the dressing of the turkey. "You know all about such things," she told him. "Andy and Dave don't know beans about how to dress a turkey."

This was a high compliment, as Granny had known it would be. Hank burned the feathers in the kitchen stove. The draft was poor, and the house was heavy with the stench for a time after he had gone—with the parting injunction: "Don't say nothin' 'bout havin' a Chris'mas turkey. The news might git to Sam Bragg, over the grapevine."



It was Hank Butler who brought the turkey for Christmas, a big, long-bearded gobbler.

Andy explained this to the women, later. Kate and Hope both vowed they wouldn't enjoy a bit of it, but they had different reasons. Granny, however, declared that it looked like an excellent bird and that she planned to relish it in the highest. They would keep it out in the cold, in a roaster with the top tied down, until Christmas day.

There was too much to do to plan a "big" Christmas. It would have to be just another day, with the simplest of gifts, the barest of celebrations.

"We'll sing 'Silent Night!'" Hope said, "with Mr. Eliot playing the violin while Mr. Flipp looks on in contempt of slow, draggy music."

"Yes, we'll have to have those two with us," Kate put in. "My goodness, there won't be any oysters for the turkey dressing. The first time in years and years we haven't had oysters for—"

"Might get some mussels out of the bayou," Dave broke in. "They're like oysters. And say, Bill Darnley told me that sometimes you can find a real pearl in a mussel. He said a fellow found one about five years ago that he got a hundred dollars for."

"You might look a thousand years, though," Andy said, "before you opened a mussel with a perfect pearl in it."

"Come summer, though," Hope predicted, "Dave and I will be hunting pearls!"

"Come summer," Granny said flatly, "you'll be thinking of more practical things than pearls."

Andy and Dave had already started with their clearing. They chose the highest ground to begin on, for that would be the first dry land in spring.

Big Stops By For a Visit

"Most of these trees sprouted before you were born," Andy told him. "Some of the thickets were here, sending out more matted roots each year, even before the trees got much start. They've got the jump on you, son. You can't undo nature's work in a swivet."

Christmas Eve brought a break in the weather, and at sunset the sky was overcast with a low, gray cloud. The air was heavy. They could hear the train whistle lonesomely for Newcastle. A drizzling rain started early in the evening, pattering softly on the new cypress shingles. Now and then, sleet peppered down. It rattled like fine bits of glass on the roof, and when an occasional gust drove it against the north window it made a sharp swishing sound. Andy sat nodding before the fire. He and Dave had worked at the clearing even on that day, and he was tired. It was sweet to sit in the glow of the slow-burning lengths of oak and feel the warmth play over him, while the rain whispered and the sleet rattled outside. His house—his land—established—The Lord had been good.

In the morning the cloud still hung low, but the rain had stopped. The temperature had dropped a little, and fine snow was in the air. It would be a passable Christmas Day.

Hope had made a holly wreath for the front window. Dave, at her suggestion, had rustled up some thick-leaved mistletoe pearled with berries. She hung a piece of it over the front door. "In case Oreen comes along," she teased Dave.

He blushed. "You're hoping Hank Butler comes too, I guess."

"All right, you win!" Hope told him, shuddering as she had a swift mental picture of Hank Butler's smoldering black eyes.

Mr. Eliot and Mr. Flipp arrived during the middle of the morning, just as the house was becoming tantalizingly fragrant with roasting turkey. They wore eager, hungry looks. Mr. Eliot was ruddy-cheeked, and his eyes were quick and bright behind his owlish glasses. He wore clean, but unironed clothes, and even a black tie awkwardly knotted and sadly out of line with the V of his shirt collar. He brought his violin, which he took from the case and laid lovingly on top of the piano.

Mr. Flipp had shaved in deference to the importance of the day, and he had trimmed his pale hair, achieving very choppy effects here and there.

Mr. Eliot and Hope were trying to get together on "Indian Love Call," when Bigelow Halleck rode up. He was entering the door before Hope knew he was anywhere around. She looked over her shoulder just as he was straightening up, and observed that he was so tall that his big head hid the mistletoe from her.

"Just stopped by to say 'Merry Christmas'," he said. "Don't let me stop the music. Sounds good."

"Well, come right in," Andy called happily. "You can stay and have dinner with us."

"Watch out!" Dave warned "You're standing right under the mistletoe. Hope had me put it up You'd better move, Big!"

Hope flushed and cut a sharp glance at the boy. Out of the corner of her eye she could see the towering caller smile.

"I'm pretty safe, I guess," he said to Dave, meeting the boy's playful mood. "Say, Mrs. Ives," he said to Kate, who had come from the kitchen, "everything looks right Christmasy around here. I was looking for a stray cow, and rode by—"

Escaping From Scheming Oreen

"Stay for dinner," Kate urged. "We'd love to have you, or would your mother like that?"

"Oh, mom's looking for me back to the house. He looked briefly toward Hope, who had turned back to the piano and was pretending to be busy with a sheet of music. "I'll have to get on back home."

"He's scared of the mistletoe," Dave said, determined to have his joke.

"Dave," Kate said gently, reproving him not so much because the spirit of the season was driving him beyond the bounds of good taste, but because Hope had shot her a look of appeal. She was casting about for some tactful way to stop Dave's teasing when the roar of a truck announced that the Websters were approaching.

Dave started and looked quickly out of the window, but he knew that it was the Webster pickup even before it careened into view. There was no mistaking that sound! He paled, and a grim, tight set was about his mouth. He got up to go out of the room.

"Well, good!" Andy cried, pleased to be having so much company on that happy day. "It's Harley and Birdie and Oreen. Excuse me, Big, and I'll follow Dave out to greet 'em."

Dave shook his head and made a dry sound out of his mouth. He struck out for the back door. If Andy wanted to follow him out, he'd have to go by way of the South Pole if he came across the Websters! He was getting away from there, and promptly!

"Wait, Dave!" Hope called, feeling that fate had wrought justice in bringing Oreen at this moment. "You're always talking about mistletoe. Now's your chance to prove why you're so fond of the stuff!"

Heat Stroke

In heat stroke, the temperature is very high—107 or over—the skin is hot and dry, the face is flushed, and the patient is unconscious. In heat exhaustion, the temperature may be subnormal or only slightly elevated, and the skin is moist, sometimes cool and clammy. Heat cramps are severe, painful spasms of the muscles. First aid for heat stroke is immediate cold water baths or spray and cold compresses. Bed rest is indicated for the other conditions. Water and salt or salt tablets are given for heat cramps.

Undulant Fever

Undulant fever is widely prevalent in American rural areas and among urban slaughterhouse workers. Aside from handlers of raw meat of cattle, goats and swine, others contact the disease from the drinking of unpasteurized milk from cows infected with Bang's disease, the bovine strain of the disease.

First Bootleggers

The Tuscarora Indians of North Carolina were among the first bootleggers, carrying forbidden rum to tribes of the interior, and selling it by the mouthful. The purchaser hired the tribesman with the biggest mouth as his scale, the mouth-man spewing the rum into a bowl brought along as a receptacle.

Human Brain

The human brain, at birth, has acquired more than one-fourth of its adult size. By the time the average child is six years old, his brain is nine-tenths the size of a fully-developed adult brain.

Meals in Micronesia

The saying that a "woman's work is never done" is a reality in Micronesia, an island in the Pacific. Every man in the family must have his food cooked in a separate pot over a separate fire, if he is to keep his social standing.

Water and Fire

Water causes burning grease, fats and oils to spatter violently and thus spreads the flame. Water is not effective on fires involving electrical equipment and short circuits until after the circuit is cut off. In such cases the fire extinguisher is the logical answer.

Pennsy Station

The Pennsylvania station in New York city handles daily an average of 830 passenger trains, including suburban, and more than 322,000 passengers, the greatest number for any passenger station in the United States.

Who Invented Eyeglasses?

The Chinese are said to have invented eyeglasses. According to legend, they were used as early as 500 B. C. The World Book encyclopedia states that Marco Polo reported that he saw Chinese wearing glasses in China, about 1275 A.D.

Wetted Wheat

Wheat wetted by rain during harvest is usually degraded when sold under the prevailing market system because wetting has caused a lowering of the test weight and a decrease in the quantity of bright appearing kernels.

Oldest Map

The oldest known map in the world was produced about 4,500 years ago. A clay tablet unearthed in ruins 200 miles north of the site of Babylon, it is now preserved in the Semetic museum of Harvard university.

Marine Corpsman Sets Unofficial Rifle Mark

Washington, D.C.—Marine Corporal Stanley F. Sanders of Fleet Marine Force, Atlantic, set an unofficial National Rifle association record recently when he fired a string of 117 consecutive bullseyes in the Maryland state .30 caliber championship rifle matches.

Sanders' feat came about in the prone rapid fire matches on the 200 yard line. Seven shooters were tied with perfect scores on the initial run, and it was necessary to continue firing in the eliminations.

The records will be posted as "unofficial" until the NRA can examine the claim for record.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U.S. Crops at Near-Record Peak; Lewis Hints at Coal Mine Strike; Steel Industry Resists Wage Hike

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

SUPERCILIOUS SWINE UNIMPRESSED BY GI — Nominated for honors as swinedom's most snooty member, this porker at Okayama, Japan, is entirely unimpressed as Pfc. Joe McClendon, Modesto, Calif., uses an aspirator to capture disease-bearing mosquitoes in a house at Okayama. The GI's not-to-happy look is probably inspired by the realization that a hog with such a supercilious appearance might quickly instill an inferiority complex in any human being who gazed too long.

U.S. CROPS:

Near Record

Marshall plan countries, nations everywhere sharing in the largesse of Uncle Sam, would rejoice at the news that the 1949 U. S. crop forecast indicated a near-record volume. So rosy was the picture that experts held that this year's farm production would almost approximate 1948's record output.

REPORTING this, the U. S. department of agriculture said that if the crop did not top all records, it certainly would be second only to last year's figures. Since the growing season for most crops was practically over, there was little likelihood in any change in the crop forecast.

Corn, especially, was abundant, with this crop almost certain to result in some sort of controls on surpluses. The prediction for the corn crop was 3.5 billion bushels, only 3.5 per cent below last year's record, but 27 per cent above average. The new figure was only about 13 million bushels less than the forecast of a month ago.

It was believed that a corn crop of this size was virtually certain to lead the government to invoke production controls on the 1950 crop in a move to prevent accumulation of a burdensome surplus. As a consequence, corn from this year's crop is expected to move into government hands under price-support programs to join the more than 400 million bushels remaining there from the 1948 crop.

NO OFFICIAL decision on corn was likely, however, until after the October crop estimate.

The agriculture department's wheat crop estimate of nearly 1.25 billion bushels was virtually unchanged from a month previous. This would make it the fourth largest wheat crop on record. Also among the relatively large crops were rice, tree nuts, soybeans, grapes, cotton, flaxseed, sorghum grain, dried beans, sugar cane and cherries.

RELIGION:

15 Priests Held

Charging the church with using an underground communications network, the Communist government in Czechoslovakia arrested priests in an effort, it said, to smash the organization.

THERE were indications that despite the arrests, the system was still working because it was needed by the church to maintain contact between its priests and their bishops.

As a point in proof of the continued operation of the system, it was pointed out that parish priests still are sending in declarations to the government that they would rather go to jail than obey a new church-control bill which the Communists proposed to enact.

PRIESTS who have been sending in these declarations say they will never accept appointment from anyone except their freely-acting church superiors.

The church has demanded that the government call off its war against the clergy if it wants to enter into any new negotiations for an agreement as to the role of church and state in the governmental setup.

Relax, Fellows

All was serene, at least for the moment, between the American army and the American air force. The army apologized and thus ended a "battle" crisis growing out of the army's challenge of an air force claim that a mythical "enemy" armored force had been wiped out in war games in Germany.

The air force general in command, after the army blast at his claims, had threatened to pick up his planes and go home from the maneuvers.

Then the army admitted the air force was right, with the commanding general apologizing for the inability of his ground-forces umpire to assess properly the sudden strikes by the air force.

COAL:

Lewis Sputters

In the North, trees were showing the first sparks of autumnal color. In the West snow already had fallen in one state. Fall was in the air and the crisp sharpness, the thinning sunlight all indicated the time was right.

And as is his wont, John L. Lewis knew it. The United Mine Workers' chief was threatening coal strike—and at a time when the threat would be most effective.

BUT AS USUAL, his threat was based apparently upon the highest ideals. There was no question of higher wages or shorter working hours. Instead, Lewis charged that southern coal operators had bled the union's welfare fund white by withholding payments.

Lewis did not mention the word "strike," but he said a continuation of the default in payments might cause "reactions deterrent to the constructive progress of the industry."

However, everybody on the sidelines in Washington construed that statement to hold a strike threat. The National Coal association advised its members that Lewis' language was a "direct threat" and added:

"No mention is made of the fact that there is no contract and no agreement to pay. . . ."

STEEL:

4th Round Unsure

Unless the situation changed drastically, there would be no fourth-round wage increase for the nation's steelworkers. Almost on the eve of the strike call, the CIO-United Steelworkers union gave up its fight for a wage hike, and called off the strike.

THE million-member union accepted both President Truman's recommendation for an extension of the strike truce and recommendations of a presidential fact-finding board aimed at solving the steel-wage dispute.

Philip Murray, union boss, told the President in a telegram that he gave up the wage increase demand "with profound regret," but agreed to the board's recommendations "in the interest of concluding a prompt settlement."

Six of the nation's major steel producers accepted the truce extension request, but no company had given an answer on the board's formula.

PRESENT FARM AID DEFENDED

Aitken Claims Wheat, Cotton Props High

According to Senator Aitken (R., Vt.), present farm aid law provides for high price props for wheat and cotton and he declared that anyone who contends otherwise is guilty of misrepresentation.

The senator was defending the flexible farm-support law he helped write in the preceeding congress and which bears his name. Barring new farm-aid legislation, the Aitken law would become effective next January 1.

He said he thought the law requires that in 1950 support of wheat and cotton prices be at 83 to 90 per cent of parity. He called this a "far cry from the misrepresentation of those who tell wheat and cotton growers that they will get only 60 per cent under the 1948 act."

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Our wallpaper is coming loose above our radiator. We papered three years ago this spring. We took all the old paper off and then gave the walls a good coat of glue sizing. Could you suggest something we could use that will not loosen the paper? (We have vapor heat.)

ANSWER: As you say the paper loosened above the radiator, but evidently did not loosen anywhere else, I make the guess that the heat was in the radiator at the time of papering, and the heat dried out the glue size too quickly so that the paper did not make a good bond. If you are planning to repaper, make sure that the radiator is cold at the time you paper that part of the room.

QUESTION: Our dining-room furniture has white spots on the legs, probably caused by striking the legs with shoes. Is there some way I can touch them up? I do not want to refinish the entire piece unless I have to.

ANSWER: I suppose the pieces are made of a white wood, such as maple, and the varnish has been scuffed off. I believe you will find it more satisfactory to do a good job rather than touch up the pieces with preparations for hiding the damage. However, perhaps you would rather do it this way. If so, ask your hardware dealer for one or two of the new products made for concealing scratches and other blemishes on furniture or ask at a furniture store.

QUESTION: There is a corner crack in our bedroom wall and the ceiling has cracks. We have used a preparation for fixing cracks, but after a severe winter the cracks show up again. Is there any other material besides paper that would be pretty and not crack down at the corners? Our room is finished in calcimine. Would that have to be removed if covered with other material?

ANSWER: A corner crack needs a somewhat different treatment from a crack in the straight wall. The plaster should be removed down to the lath on each side of the corner for a distance of 4 to 6 inches. Then a metal corner lath is nailed in place and that part of the wall then is replastered. If you cannot get corner lath, you may be able to get metal lath in strips 8 to 12 inches wide. Bend the strips at right angles to fit the corner and fasten in place. It would be advisable to have a plasterer do the job for you. The ceiling crack can be "undercut" to make it wider at the lath than at the surface. The plaster crumbs should be cleaned out and the groove wet with water. It then can be filled with patching plaster almost to the top and allowed to dry. It will shrink a trifle in drying. It then should be filled to the surface and smoothed level with the surrounding plaster surface.

Hide Signs of Wealth

In every Bantu language there is a word to describe the action of a man who, owning a considerable herd of cattle, plants them out among his poorer relatives and neighbors so that he will not appear too prosperous. Everybody knows that they are his, and just how many he has, but he must avoid any appearance of ostentation. Similarly, it is not considered advisable to own too good a house or lands that are too well cultivated. Fear of exciting the envy of the chief is one of the motives that govern this attitude of mind, which always has been a powerful brake to the progress of Bantu agriculture in South Africa.

RED CROSS HOSPITAL WORKERS HELP SPEED PATIENT RECOVERY

The job of rebuilding sick bodies and minds of servicemen in military hospitals and restoring them to useful life is carried forward by a team—doctors, nurses, and Red Cross workers. The Red Cross worker may be a medical or psychiatric social worker, a recreation specialist, or a combination of them assisted by a Gray Lady.

Military physicians and nurses find that restoring the health of a sick man requires much more than medicine and food. The will to live and the will to do things must be revived before medical treatment can get in its beneficial work. That's where the Red Cross enters the picture.

A young soldier, only 23, was injured in an accident at a munitions proving ground. Half of his face and neck were blown away. Painracked and frightened, he had little taste for ordinary hospital recreation. He loved music, though, so the recreation worker brought to his bedside a radio phonograph and then, by mere chance, found she could satisfy a greater longing. The boy revealed that he wanted to write to his young wife those tender, personal things that he hesitated to dictate.

A recording machine was bought to his bedside, and he found the words to tell his longings to his distant wife. It wasn't easy because his injury had damaged his vocal chords and articulation was difficult. But after patient practice with the hospital worker, he finally poured out his heart to the record and sent it off to his wife.

To the arthritic, the tubercular, the rheumatic heart sufferer, doomed to long periods of bed care, the recreational services provided by Red Cross ease their burden of restlessness and discouragement. Nearby chapters in cooperation with other local agencies bring into the hospitals young people from the nearby communities, women who serve as hostesses for parties, young people who dance and play games, all reminding the sick soldier that he is not forgotten by those he served.

Red Cross hospital workers assist medical officers with welfare and recreation programs for military patients.

Under federal statute and regulations of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, the American Red Cross furnishes volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of the armed forces and acts in matters of voluntary relief and as a medium of communication between the people of the United States and their armed forces.

Minn. Poll on Bonus Spending

A large part of the $82,000,000 which the state of Minnesota is preparing to pay in bonuses to veterans of World war 2 will go toward "paying bills", making payments on homes or farms, and into savings, according to a statewide survey by the Minnesota Poll.

Both veterans and members of the veterans' families were interviewed in the study to determine how the more than 290,000 veterans throughout the state expect to use their bonus checks.

While more than half of the veterans expect to use the money to pay up bills, to apply on home or farm purchases, or to add to their savings accounts, others will use their bonus to further their educations, to make payments on cars, to buy furniture, to improve their homes, to buy machinery, or in a few cases to help them start their own businesses.

Several veterans, noting that the state legislature boosted tax rates to help pay the costs of the bonus, say they're not planning tn spend the money because we'll have to pay it right back in taxes".

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, including Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, face various difficulties in the wilderness where they have gone to make a new home of their own. A group of hunters resents the intrusion of the homesteaders and attempts to make trouble. Following the worst of the land clearing, the Ives give a housewarming at which they invite all the neighbors who helped them. For their first Christmas, Hank Butler, one of the more disreputable neighbors, presents them with a wild turkey. While they are celebrating the day quietly, Big Halleck, handsome young man to whom Hope is attracted, stops in. Dave teases Big about standing under the mistletoe, embarrassing Hope.

CHAPTER XV

It was a desperate retreat, and one that would soon put distance between him and the eager-eyed girl he hadn't seen since the housewarming. Keeping the house between him and the point where the pickup was stopping, Dave ran fast, southward. He disappeared in the growth.

Harley was in high mood. "Merry Chris'mas, Andy Ives!" he cried in his foggy voice. "Birdie said we'd just drive by a minute an' wish you the best of the season."

"Merry Christmas!" Oreen sang out as she descended from the cab, doing her best to be graceful in stepping to the ground. "Where's Dave?"

"Oh, he's around some place," Andy told her. "Come in to the fire. Maybe you can have dinner with us."

"Goodness, no!" Birdie protested. "We wouldn't think of that! I cooked our Christmas dinner early this mornin', what I hadn't fixed last night, that is, an' we'll stay jest a minute here."

And Birdie went into the house, saying, "Now, Miz Ives, if you're busy, don't stop. Just you go right ahead an' don't let us bother you." She noticed Bigelow Halleck at the fire. "Howdy, Big," she said and shot a keen glance at Hope.

"Hi, 'Reen. If you're lookin' for Dave, he just went out the back door."

"She's not lookin' for Dave," Birdie almost snapped, with a quick, over-the-shoulder glance at Bigelow Halleck. "Go take off your wrap, 'Reen, an' git your feet warm in front of the fire. It was cold in the truck."

Oreen smiled at Big again, as if apologizing for her mother's sharpness. "What made you think I was lookin' for Dave?" she asked challengingly.

"I heard you ask where he was when you got out of the truck," Big told her. "That's why I mentioned it."

Birdie bristled slightly at that, and would probably have said something if Harley hadn't been coming in at that moment, talking loudly. So, she spent her feelings on him.

"Don't yell so, Harley! My goodness, we're in a house now." And, to the others: "Harley has to yell to make hisself heard when he's drivin' the truck. It takes 'im a time to stop it when he gits out."

"All right, honey," Harley agreed, using softer tones, "I didn't know I was yellin'. Hi, Big. Nice Chris'mas, ain't it?"

Mr. Eliot, disappointed by these interruptions to the progress he and Hope were making on "Indian Love Call," returned violin and bow to the top of the piano.

"Hello, Harley," Bigelow Halleck answered. "Right nice. I've got to be gittin' along, though. I'm out after a black-necked Jersey heifer this morning. Seen her?"

Birdie was plainly glad to see Bigelow Halleck go. "I was afraid," she whispered to Kate, "that he had come to dinner here. I sure would hate to see him an' Hope git to likin' each other. Or any other girl like Hope or Oreen."

Hope, who had heard herself catalogued with Oreen just as she re-entered the room, groaned. She wondered why she deserved this dubious distinction. She also wondered why Birdie Webster, on such slight evidence as she had reported, was so dead set against Bigelow Halleck in her remarks!

"That smells like turkey," Mrs. Webster said, sniffing the air. "Ain't it?"

Birdie Voices Her Suspicions

Kate, leading the way to the kitchen, for the bird needed basting, told her that it was. "Take a chair and join in the talk," she invited. "I just have to see about things in the kitchen."

"Maybe I can help you." Birdie followed. "Where'd you git the turkey?"

"It was brought to us a few days ago," Kate told her. "We couldn't have afforded to buy one this year."

"Goodness, I should [illegible] not! Turkeys is too high to [illegible] talkin' 'bout raisin' [illegible] market in Newcast[illegible] says they're awful hard to raise, an' that they eat like hogs. Course, we could range 'em through summer an' early fall, an' fatten them up on corn just 'fore Thanksgivin' an' Chris'mas; but there's so much to do that I ain't got the time to spare, I reckin." She paused for breath. Then, rentlessly but gently, she asked the question that was bound to come: "What friend brought you the turkey?"

"Did I say a friend brought it?" Kate parried. It was her view that this was none of Birdie's business, and she was rather determined that she would withhold the source of their roasting bird. There were good reasons for keeping the news from spreading, that Hank Butler had brought the Iveses a turkey.

"Well, you didn't exactly say a friend brought it," Birdie admitted, "but I guessed that much. It don't look like anybody but a friend would've brought you all a turkey, so I put two an' two together. Course, if you'd ruther not tell me, then that's all right." She looked hurt and a little defeated. "I ain't ever been one to poke into other people's business."

"Oh, I'm sure of that," Kate said. She basted the turkey, taking a long time at it, then closed the oven door.

When she straightened up and turned, Birdie Webster was standing with folded arms, a grim light in her pale blue eyes.

"Let's go back to the fire now," Kate said.

"That ain't a bought turkey, or a yard raised one," Birdie said. "I seen it. I know the diff'unce 'tween tame turkeys an'—an' the other kind."

Kate felt a nervous anger, but she concealed it. "Well, I guess there is a difference," she said easily, "but I don't know what it is. Tame turkeys are the only kind I've ever eaten."

Christmas Spirit Pervades the Swamp

Mrs. Webster nodded and gave Kate a look that was quick and sharp and totally lacking in the brotherly love she had mentioned a moment ago.

The Webster's at Birdie's suggestion, left soon after this. Kate knew that the woman was miffed and suffering from a defeated curiosity. Maybe it would have been better to tell her who had brought the turkey, but, goodness alive, a woman in her own house, in her own kitchen, should be able to cook something for her family without telling people where it came from!

Dave returned when the truck had passed out of hearing. "I heard Deefy down in the deep swamp," he reported before Hope could start on him about his retreat from Oreen. "He was making those strange sounds, and sometimes he makes you think he's laughing."

"He was lookin' at you," Mr. Flipp said. "You didn't see him, but he was seein' you."

"He sounded 'way back in the swamp, though," Dave said. "I don't think he saw me."

"It's the way he makes them soun's," Mr. Flipp said. "You'll think sometimes that he's a mile away, an' then all at once you can see him right yonder a piece. He was talkin' to you, if you can call it talkin'."

Dave swallowed dryly. "Still, I feel sorry for him, out there by himself. Why, he doesn't even know it's Christmas, does he?"

"Why don't you and Hope fix a Christmas dinner for the poor [illegible]?" Granny asked. "That would [illegible] nice."

"Let's!" Hope exclaimed, delighted with the idea. "Right after dinner, Dave, we'll—"

"But how'd we get it to him?" Dave cut in. "We can't call to him, and we can't go into the swamp and hunt him up."

"You'd never find him that way," Mr. Flipp said. "He can move as quiet as a coon in soft mud, an' he can be so still when he wants to that you could be ten feet from him an' not know he was in a mile of you."

"Say!" Dave exclaimed, struck by an idea. "Why not build a little smoke near the edge of the swamp and let the north wind carry it down into that tangle where Deefy lives. Maybe he'd smell it and come out to see what was burning. We could give him the dinner then."

Mr. Flipp viewed him with new appreciation. "Boy, you got more gumption that I figgered!" He nodded, looking sad to indicate his commendation. "That sure oughta work."

The dinner was a glorious success. Messrs. Flipp and Eliot consumed enormous amounts of turkey and dressing, sweet potato, scalloped corn, coconut cake and ambrosia. It was the first festive meal that either of them had faced in years. Mr. Eliot, who had talked a great deal during the repast, was still eating long after the others had stopped.

Granny shot a sharp look at the hunter-trapper, and said pointedly: "Mr. Eliot's store of information is amazing! This meal has been instructive as well as filling. More ambrosia, Mr. Eliot?"

"Thank you," he said, passing his sherbet dish. "It is a delicious commingling of fruits and coconut—different, I am sure, from what the gods of Olympus enjoyed, but fully as satisfying."

After the meal, Mr. Flipp looked popeyed and stuffed as he sat before the warm fire. Mr. Eliot promptly began nodding, and light sibilant sounds issued from his rounded mouth.

"Poor old soul!" Granny said softly as she and Kate and Hope did the dishes. "I wonder why he's here, living like this. I mean, what makes him do it, aside from the fact that he has freedom and time for reading and thinking out here in the swamp?"

Hope fixed Deefy's dinner on an old cracked plate that would be no loss if it never returned to the Ives china. She piled on turkey and dressing and all the trimmings, even to the ambrosia and cake. Then she and Dave struck out toward the swamp. It was two o'clock, still cloudy, cooler, with a sharpening breeze out of the north. They came to the point from which Dave had heard the mute's weird mouthings, and Dave built a smudge of leaves and small chunks. They set the plate on a stump close by, then moved a distance away, toward the house. They did not hide, for Deefy might be watching them, and there was no telling what strange meaning he might find in such a move on their part. They stood together and waited, while the breeze bore the pungent smoke into the swamp fastness.

"The dinner will get cold," Hope said. "I wish he'd come on."

"It'll be better cold than what he's used to eating," Dave reminded her. "Maybe he won't come at all. He may be a mile back in the swamp. No telling."

"Let's go on to the house." Hope's teeth were chattering lightly now. She had never seen the giant mute, and waiting for him to appear was exciting; suspense and the chill of the afternoon were combining their effect on her.

"Wait just a minute more," Dave begged. "I'd like to see him when he finds what's on the plate—if he finds it."

Hope nodded. Then she gasped lightly. "Did I see a bush move, there by the burnt snag?" she asked, locating the place without pointing. "I thought—"

Deefy Gets a Turkey Dinner

The strange creature's tattered garments blended with the background as perfectly as the coat or the feathers of wild animal or game bird. At first he was just a shape taking form against the growth, and he was moving in a crouch.

"It gives me creeps and chills to watch him!" Hope whispered. "I'd die if he came close to me, Dave!"

"Oh, I bet he wouldn't hurt you," Dave scoffed. "Besides, you'd run so fast you wouldn't take time to die!"

"He sees the plate now!" Hope exclaimed. "Wonder if he knows what a plate is?"

"He sees us too," Dave told her.

The mute had come to the very edge of the lower growth now. And there he straightened to his full height, a broad-shouldered, towering figure, and stepped out into the open. He was facing Hope and Dave.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Test Cake Quality

The quality of a cake can be tested without cutting into the cake itself if you set aside a small portion of batter and bake it as a cupcake. When both cakes are done, a taste of the little one will reveal the quality of the large one.

Cole Slaw Dressing

Instead of vinegar for a cole slaw dressing, use the leftover juice from a jar of sweet pickles You'll get an unusual flavor.

Hot Water Bottle Patch

Another way to patch a leaky hot water bottle is to melt part of an old jar rubber, rub the molten rubber over the hole with a flat-bladed knife and press it down with your fingers.

Tea Flavor

Coloring Margarine

To color margarine for table use, put your electric mixer to work on the job. Then, without cleaning the stray margarine off the mixer paddles, use the mixer for whipping mashed potatoes.

Condiments

Keep a large shaker of both salt and pepper in the kitchen and you can add both condiments to a dish with one shaking.

Two New Uses Reported On Aluminum Foil List

Adding to the ever-growing list of uses for aluminum foil, The Aluminum association has reported two more ways that it can be used to make life easier for the housewife.

Number one: place a sheet of aluminum foil underneath the ironing board cover. Because aluminum has a high reflectivity to heat, the foil reflects enough heat back to the under surface of the material so that in effect both sides are ironed at once. The Association also reports that the foil lessons the danger of scorching.

Use number two makes outdoor cooking more fun. Wrap hamburgers, frankfurters or any other meats in aluminum foil before you place them over your barbecue grill. The foil will make the meat cook more quickly while retaining the juices that are often lost in open fire cooking. And, if you have buns to place your hamburgers on, wrap them in foil and in a minute or so they'll regain their oven-freshness. For baking potatoes in the coals, wrap them in foil first. They bake more quickly and come out without a charcoal finish.

The Questions

1. Will a cow give more milk if she is milked three times a day instead of two?
2. What is the biggest crop in the U.S.?
3. Is there a sure way to tell sheep from goats?
4. How long does it take to feel a pin prick in your fingers?
5. Does the weather always travel in a given direction?

The Answers

1. Yes, from 10 to 25 per cent more.
2. Corn.
3. Goats carry their tails up sheep carry theirs down.
4. About one hundredth of a second.
5. Almost always. In the temperate zones its direction is from the West to the East.

Dumplings

If dumplings are on the same menu as gravy, don't wash the bowl in which the dumpling dough was mixed. Instead, add a little water to the dough which sticks to the bowl and use it to thicken the gravy.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Red Delegate Urges U.N. Accord; World Awaits Pound Cut Effects; Walkouts Plague Major Industry

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

RUSSIA:

A 'Sweet' Note

The Russian theme in international accord was growing a little sweeter, if Andrei Y. Vishinsky, Soviet foreign minister could be taken at his word.

WEARING a broad smile, Vishinsky had urged United Nations members to cooperate. The gesture was made by the chief delegate as he arrived in New York by plane to attend the fourth United Nations general assembly sessions.

Disdaining the usual brusqe "no comment" for reporters, Vishinsky was almost voluble. "The Soviet delegation," he said, "is fully confident that the United Nations is—as the head of the Soviet government, Stalin, said—a serious instrument for the maintenance of peace and international security."

Then he added: "There can be no doubt that the general assembly would be able to solve the important problems before it providing the nations of the U.N. show a sincere desire to cooperate with each other and in accordance with the principles of the U.N. charter.

Other delegates, advised of this and remembering the almost innumerable Russian "vetoes" in matters where cooperation might have been most valuable, decided to await development at assembly sessions to see just how far the Russian affable manner would go.

DEVALUATION:

Wait and See

To say that reaction to Britain's devaluation of the pound sterling was mixed, would be an understatement. Instead, reaction ranged from hope to fear, from confusion to jubilant "I told you so's" from all those who had held that devaluation was the only answer to Britain's current economic crisis.

AND that was the chief rub—was the solution one that would solve just the current situation, or was it the entire answer? The bulk of the thinking on that angle was that it was not the long-range panacea, with most observers preferring to "wait and see" before committing themselves to any analysis of the devaluation effect.

Meanwhile Canada had joined the parade of English-connected nations devaluating the pound.

THE DEVALUATION move was a two-edged sword in the British dollar crisis, for just as it might result in increased buying of British goods by Americans because of lowered costs, it would mean, too, that the English would have to pay more for the items they bought at home. The pound value was cut from $5.03 to $3.07, an action which alarmed most importers.

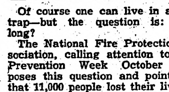
While expressing fear the move would cost them a great deal of money, most traders said they "didn't know a thing" yet and couldn't speculate until they had some word from British manufacturers.

SOME DEALERS and importers declared they would take a beating on the reduced values of their inventory of British goods already bought and paid for at $4.03 to the pound.

Fire Hazards

Of course one can live in a firetrap—but the question is: How long?

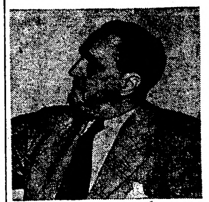
The National Fire Protection association, calling attention to Fire Prevention Week October 9-15, poses this question and points out that 11,000 people lost their lives in fires last year. More than twice that number were seriously injured. One-third of that number, the association reported, lived on farms.



Dry roof is vulnerable.

Reporting that a few structural hazards account for at least half of all farm fires, the NFPA urged farmers to take steps now to eliminate such hazards. These steps were listed as: checking of wiring systems; wetting down of inflammable roofs in dry weather; inspecting heating plants and chimneys, and protection of main buildings with lighting rods.

New Justice



Judge Sherman Minton, of U.S. circuit court at Chicago, was named by President Truman to succeed the late supreme court Justice Wiley B. Rutledge.

WALKOUTS:

Cars, Coal, Steel

American industry, fighting to regain pre-war stability, was facing parlous times. John L. Lewis' coal miners had left the pits. The United Automobile Workers union had handed the Ford Motor company what amounted to a strike notice, and now the steel industry was next.

WITH these basic U.S. industries all down, production suspended, millions of workers out of jobs, the national industrial and economic picture appeared dim indeed.

President Truman was coming in for some blame in the steel industry dispute, with critics charging he had "fumbled the ball" in efforts to prevent a strike.

Four days before the deadline for start of the strike, federal conciliator Cyrus Ching had reported no progress in negotiations. Neither side would budge on the key point in negotiations.

The union contended that since it had agreed to forego its demands for a pay raise, the steelmakers should accept the presidential fact-finding board's recommendations for a company-financed welfare fund. While this seemed to satisfy steelworkers, it didn't please the UAW.

ON the other hand, the steel industry was buying newspaper space to claim that it was agreed at the outset that the presidential board's findings would not be binding on either party, and that if a strike resulted, the union would have to assume the responsibility.

Steel leaders took the position, too, that the workers should contribute to the pension-insurance plan costing 10 cents an hour for each man.

BOMBERS:

Gives Reds Pause

The declaration came from a man whose qualifications entitle him to the rating of expert—Gen. Henry H. Arnold, wartime chief of U.S. air forces. The statement, made in a book, "Global Missions," was that it isn't armies or navies that Russia fears, but only far-reaching bomber strength.

"Let's put it this way," the general wrote. "Russia has no fear of an army, she thinks hers is just as good and bigger than any other in the world; she has no fear of a navy since she can't see how it could be employed against her; but she does fear our long-range strategic air force which she cannot as yet match, or as yet understand. In the strategic air force, coupled with our atomic bomb, at this writing we hold the balance of power in the world."

"But," he warned, "by tomorrow the picture may change."

Arnold minced no words in the dim view he takes of the Russians. "The Russians," he says, "would have none of the American proposal that the American air force be allowed to build B-29 bases in Siberia to attack Japan." Similarly, he recalled that agreement for bases in Russian territory to be used for shuttle-bombing of Germany, was ended after a short time by Moscow.

The air force, in the current squabble over armed-service prestige as a result of the unification bill, could take much solace and encouragement from General Arnold's statements.

MARSHALL PLAN FUNDS

Money Helps Fight Disease in Europe

Critics of the Marshall plan could find little fault with one phase of it, at least. For the record showed that through this means the United States was throwing the full weight of modern medical science into Europe's battle against war-spawned disease and malnutrition. This was disclosed by ECA officials in Paris.

Through the Marshall plan, countries and areas taking part in the European recovery program were being supplied with new laboratory and hospital equipment. Penicillin and streptomycin, as well as radium and literally tons of other medicinal products had been put to work in Europe by dollars provided by the economic cooperation administration program.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

Finishing Walls And Floor of Cellar

QUESTION: I should like some advice on finishing the walls and floor of our cellar, which we now are digging out. Our house was built without a cellar.

ANSWER: The floor can consist of at least four inches of good, waterproof concrete. If you intend to make a game-room, you could cover this with asphalt tile, which should be properly laid by an experienced workman. The walls can consist of poured concrete, or concrete block. They should be waterproofed on the outside below grade with two coats of hot tar or asphalt paint. The outside trench can be provided with drain tile to carry off water, or in any case should be solidly packed with earth formed into a bank at the top sloping away from the house. Do not throw any kind of rubble, stones or anything else into the trench can be provided with drain holds volumes of water that may work inside the cellar. (I hope you will have experienced help with this important work.) If you wish to paint the walls either inside or outside, use a waterproof cement-base paint. Get this from a dealer in building supplies or mason supplies.

RED CROSS FIELD DIRECTORS SOLVE SERVICEMEN'S PROBLEMS

Red Cross services to the armed forces are available wherever U. S. servicemen are stationed. Here a Red Cross field director goes right to a young sailor at work on his ship for the facts he needs to help solve a problem.

The sailor was young. He had finished his home leave in a southern coastal city and was heading back to his California base.

He said goodby to his parents and to an older brother, a marine veteran just returned from service. Then he left by bus.

A few hours later the older brother was killed in an automobile accident. The family appealed to the Red Cross to locate the younger son so he could return home.

Within a short while a Red Cross chapter secretary along the route intercepted the bus, broke the news, and helped the lad get started back home. There the chapter got in touch with the field director at the west coast base and verified the facts for the commanding officer who was being asked to extend the sailor's leave.

Once or more every minute, around the clock last year, the Red Cross performed some service for members of the military forces and their families. Among the nearly three quarters of a million cases handled, a large percentage involved supplying verified information concerning home conditions requiring emergency leave or extension of leave. While the Red Cross cannot grant leave to a serviceman, military authorities depend upon its post field directors and the network of chapters for reports of conditions underlying such leave requests.

Field directors in 364 military installations and hospitals and 1,059 itinerant and sub-stations in this country and abroad aid servicemen with personal problems that range from babies and budgets to helping straighten out delays that hold up pay or family allowances.

The serviceman has his family problems, marital difficulties, financial strains, and family illnesses—all disturbing to morale.

Field directors, providing 24-hour service at military installations, are pretty much in the same situation as the family doctor. They are routed out of bed at all hours to face any one of a hundred complicated problems. Sometimes it may be to get a report on the condition of a critically ill member of a soldier's family, or to lend him money for an emergency trip home, or to find housing for a family unexpectedly arriving at the post.

Whatever the problem, the serviceman feels free to turn to the Red Cross for help, knowing that he will find a sympathetic friend in the man wearing the Red Cross uniform.

Forests Renewable

A forest is not like a mine or an oil well. It does not consist of just so much material, which when taken away is gone forever. It is a replaceable resource. Forests are living, reproducing things. A forest that is not used is only a kind of storehouse. But with proper use, it becomes a sort of factory, constantly growing new supplies of wood.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

"But Curly "Knows What The Score Is!"

Was over at Doc Sherman's drug store listening to the World Series on the radio. Curly Lawson wanders in and says: "How about a chocolate malted, Doc?"

"Sorry, Curly," says Doc, "can't make you a malted for a while yet." "What's the idea?" Curly asks. "Well," says Doc, "most of the folks want to hear the game and the mixer makes too much noise." Curly thinks a moment and says, "Okay with me, Doc—I'll take a chocolate soda!"

This shows how tolerant folks can be. Doc showed his respect for how the majority felt; Curly was big enough not to insist on his malted even though he doesn't happen to be fond of baseball.

From where I sit, willingness to respect the other people's feelings is important in a Democracy. If we're tolerant of a person's like for baseball or a glass of temperate beer, we've come a long way on the right road . . . the road to a better America, that is!

Fire Precaution

Set stoves and heaters on substantial bases well away from walls. Place a sheet of metal under stoves on wooden floors. Protect any nearby woodwork with sheet metal or asbestos. Keep smokepipe clean, in good repair, securely supported, and at least a foot from woodwork or combustible material. When smokepipes pass through a combustible partition use a ventilated thimble with a foot clearance around the pipe.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U.S. Revamps Planning, Policy For Defense on Red A-Bomb Tip; Truman Says Critics Antedated

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

WANTED AN APARTMENT

THESE ADD UP TO HOUSING HEADACHE . . . Across the nation, if there was any relief from housing shortage, it was spotty, inadequate. The twins (above) born to her in Brooklyn's women's hospital made the shortage doubly acute for Mrs. William Buckley. She and her husband, together with another child, add up to five people who must share one-room apartment. Mrs. Buckley wondered where she'd park the twins when she left the hospital.

THE BOMB:

Do Reds Have It?

Does Russia really have the atomic bomb?

President Harry Truman said they did; and for once, there was no presidential contradiction when Columnist Drew Pearson said they did.

But whether they have it or not, the Truman announcement stirred up a nest of jitters everywhere.

DEFENSE CHIEFS backed up for a new look at the world situation. Congress reacted as might have been expected. The arms-to-Europe program hailed the announcement as added proof of the correctness of their stand. Other congressmen blamed laxity over the past few years in our state department and defense setup for Russia's having the bomb now—if she does have it.

A noted atomic scientist declared that for Russia to contend it had the bomb in 1947 was fantastic, that the date was "one pulled out of a hat." But he said the Soviets might well have the weapon.

Most tangible result in congress of the President's statement that there had been an "atomic explosion" inside Soviet Russia was agreement by house and senate conferees on the 1.33 billion-dollar appropriation for arms to Europe. The legislators got together very quickly on the view that to cut the appropriations, as had been first planned, would be an unwise move.

IN THE UNITED NATIONS, Britain's foreign secretary, Ernest Bevin, lashed out with a furious tirade against the Russians, charging them with stalling efforts to control atomic energy. Like Russia, Bevin said, England wants the atomic bomb banned, but the British want effective control first.

Skeptics of the idea that the Reds have the bomb were asking why Russia wanted to outlaw such a potent weapon, if she really had it —or did she think the western world suckers enough to outlaw and foreswear use of the bomb and thus give the edge to any ethics-lacking nation who might have the bomb and would drop it without warning?

TITO:

Get Out!

Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito ordered nine Hungarian diplomats expelled and accused Russia and her Cominform satellites of "rattling their arms" along the Yugoslav border.

HE STATED that his Cominform enemies were "digging trenches in Hungary and Romania."

Apparently, the fiery dictator of Yugoslavia was not frightened, still ready to wage war with Moscow, verbally or otherwise. "We will permit no one to impose their will upon us," he thundered.

Despite the dramatic atmosphere surrounding expulsion of the Hungarians, Tito's action was a retaliatory one, since it followed within 24 hours a similiar action against 10 members of the Yugoslav legation in Budapest.

TITO CLAIMED the Russians were plotting to stage a revolution in Yugoslavia in order to supplant his government with a regime servile to Moscow.

Whether or not the Russians had the atomic bomb, as has been reported, Tito didn't seem to be any less disposed to quarrel with the Kremlin.

Cripps Gets Tough

Sir Stafford Cripps, British finance boss, lost no time in bringing home to the people the import of devaluation of the pound sterling as an effort toward the country's financial problems.

His labor government raised the tax on business profits and threatened to restrict dividends by law in defending the devaluation move at an emergency session of parliament.

At the same time, the government rejected any pay raise proposals declaring this must be done to prevent an inflationary spiral.

Cripps made these moves as he opened the cabinet's appeal for a vote of confidence from the parliament.

TRUMAN:

Way Ahead

President Harry Truman was still battling vigorously for his domestic program in congress. With his usual expansive attack on critics, he charged present detractors with being "160 years behind the times."

NEVERTHELESS, the President was making a strategic approach to the congressional races next year in a drive for women recruits to the Democratic party.

In a White House radio address, beamed at the women of the nation, Mr. Truman pointed to "certain people" who denounce his "fair deal" policies as alien or dangerous.

THEY'RE NOTHING of the kind, declared the President. In fact, he asserted, "Our program consists of measures which have come up from the grassroots. Our program is as American as the soil we walk on. It is a program unshakably founded on the principle that the power of the government should be used to promote the general welfare."

Dissidents might go along with such items of the program as public housing and expanded social security benefits—but on the subjects of farm price supports, as advocated by the administration, and socialized medicine, there would be some arguments about these being of "grassroots" origin.

TOSSING A BOUQUET to woman's intelligence, the President declared that women are not misled by political slogans, added: "They look beneath the labels to see the facts."

ROCKETS:

Far Targets

Just before the end of World War II, the Germans reported experimenting with rockets that could span oceans. Now, according to information emanating from the Soviet zone of Berlin, German scientists are producing such rockets for the Russians.

The informants, who were said to have access to the offices of the Soviet-packed east German police, said the mammoth under-ground munitions plant at Peenemuende on the Baltic coast was turning out rockets at full speed.

Allied intelligence officers conceded they knew of "certain activity" at Peenemuende, but declined to elaborate. One of them explained:

"If Russia is making munitions in Germany, it's a high level matter and not for discussion here."

EFFECTIVE KILLER

Navy Discovers Potent Remedy for Colds

The United States navy was manifesting its efficiency again—but in an entirely different field. Veering away from its military side for the moment, the navy found a "cold-killer" pill that was reported 90 per cent effective.

The fight to control the common cold has been one of the longest, most difficult in all medical history. A great majority of physicians have expressed a conviction that the common cold, like the poor, will always be with us.

The navy's cold-killer has been named "Corcidin," derived from "coryza," meaning the common cold, and "cide," to kill. The pill must be taken at the first sign of a cold to insure its maximum efficiency. That it was discovered accidentally is beside the point.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Andy Ives and his family face various difficulties in the wilderness where they have gone to make a home of their own. A group of hunters resents the intrusion of the homesteaders and attempts to make trouble. For their first Christmas Hank Butler brings them a wild turkey, an illegal bird. Big Halleck, handsome young neighbor, stops by to wish them a merry Christmas and Andy's daughter, Hope, finds herself attracted by him. Mrs. Webster, still another neighbor and a born troublemaker, recognizes the turkey as a wild one and is angry when Mrs. Ives refrains from telling her its origin. Hope and her brother, Dave, bring a Christmas dinner to Deefy, a negro halfwit.

CHAPTER XVI

A little more than a hundred yards lay between them. He stood as still as the old burnt snag. He was bareheaded, clad in a garb indescribably ragged and unkempt; yet there was dignity about him, just as there is dignity about a lion or a tiger.

A soft sound reached them. At first they couldn't tell whether it came from north or south. It was a sound that seemed to be born in the air, of the air. It was like the tremulous, low notes of a distant flute. But it grew, and there were quick little breaks in it.

"He's saying something to us!" Dave told Hope. "Deefy is 'talking' his language to us!"

Hope said nothing. Her lips were parted, and she was white with excitement.

"How does he do it?" she said as the sound grew louder, taking on weird minors and rippling with swift little breaks that even the highest-trained yodeler would have found impossible to imitate. "He must have a throat like a bird's!"

Dave raised his hand, then pointed to the stump. He had an air in making the gesture; it was probable that he wished to impress Hope with his nonchalance in the presence of the strange creature.

Deefy made sounds expressing greater excitement. He pointed directly at Hope and Dave, and a ripple of resonant, fast laughter poured from his throat. Then he waved just as Dave had waved and went toward the stump. He picked up the plate, made as if to "talk" to them again, then turned and darted away and disappeared in the swamp, swift as a deer. They heard no sound of his moving, although there were brush and tangled growth where he had run.

"Gosh, he can move!" Dave said, marveling. "Wouldn't he make a quarterback out of this world?"

"But what made him disappear like that?" Hope wanted to know. "He was about to 'say' something else to us, and then—"

"He saw me," a voice said behind them.

They wheeled. Hank Butler was coming toward them. "Merry Chris'mas, Miss Hope," he greeted her. Givin' that deef fool a present?"

Hank fell in with them. "It's a wonder somebody ain't killed that Nigger. He's worse'n a ha'nt, skulkin' there in the swamp. I don't reckin it'd be a sin, or much against the law, if somebody killed him. He ain't plum' human, nohow."

"You don't sound human, talking like that, either!" Hope said angrily. "It would be a sin, Hank Butler! You ought to be ashamed of yourself!"

Hank looked sideways at her. For a second, under her unexpected scolding, his eyes narrowed, and his thin, dark face went bleak. But when she turned on him, her eyes blazing, he looked away.

"You're a woman," he said. "I ain't goin' to argy with you 'bout it." He walked with a noticeable swagger after making this generous utterance, and occupied himself with rolling a cigarette. When he had licked the paper together, he popped a match loudly against his belt buckle and began smoking.

Hope walked faster, but Hank kept beside her.

"We're gittin' up a little play party fer New Year's night," he said as they neared the house. "I reckin you'd like to come."

Hope said nothing.

"We're talkin' 'bout havin' it at Mr. Wallace's house," Hank said. "You'll come, won't you, Dave?"

The First Christmas Comes to a Close

"Oh, I don't know. I never did go to parties much." Then he remembered the problem that would very likely face him at such a function, for Green would be there too. "No, I won't be there," he said flatly.

"You didn't say nothin', Miss Hope," he said. "Course, if you an' Dave feel too good to come to parties out here, they ain't nobody goin' to run after you."

"If I don't go," Hope told him, "it won't be because I think I'm too good. We've other things to do, and parties don't seem very important."

They were at the house by this time. Hope went into the back door and shut it firmly, making an exclamation mark of sound.

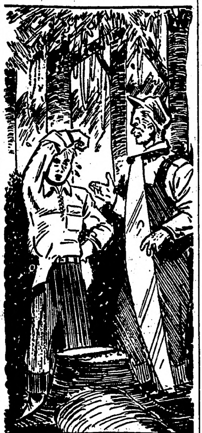
Mr. Eliot was ready for some more work on "Indian Love Call" when Hope had finished telling about Deefy. Hope felt very little like getting lost again in the badlands of discord, but there was hardly any graceful way out.

They floundered for a time, effecting some dismal combinations. Hope stopped, looked up at the old man, who was not fully aware of their cacophony, to judge by the rapt look on his face. "To carry out the Indian motif," she said bitterly, "I should say that this keyboard is my unhappy hunting ground!"

"Ah—ummn!" Mr. Eliot said soothingly. "You're doing nicely. Oh! I see! You were making a wordplay! 'Unhappy hunting ground'! Why, that's simply dandy! Ha! Ha!" He turned to the fireplace. "Get that, Mr. Flipp? 'Unhappy hunting ground'! She has trouble in finding the right chords, and keeps hunting for them. Get it?"

Mr. Flipp nodded and yawned. "Cute," he said, winking at Andy.

"H'm!" Mr. Eliot said in lofty disgust. He tapped Hope's shoulder with his bow, and when she looked up, he grimaced to summarize his opinion of Mr. Flipp's low perception. "Now, the rest on page two," he said briskly. "Strike that chord and hold it for my obbligato—"



"The first hundred years are the hardest," Andy would say as they stopped to rest, after sawing down a tree.

And they were off again. Completely, to be blunt.

In this manner, Andy Ives and his family spent their first Christmas in the swamp. When Andy and Kate went to bed that night, Andy lay quietly for a time. Then he said: "I hope we'll be this happy next Christmas, but it's a long way off and a lot is going to happen."

"We'll make it a good Christmas," Kate said bravely. "And there will be other good ones after that. For years and years."

They went to sleep.

Two days later, Andy and Dave found the white, cracked plate on the stump near the old burnt snag. It was clean. When Dave picked it up, he found a tiny chain of delicately woven marsh grass. Deefy had paid for his Christmas dinner.

The cool weather held until the last day of December; then it warmed and rain set in at nightfall.

Father and Son Work Together

The rain continued to fall throughout New Year's Day. Hope was the only one who found any element of blessing in this: There would be no party at the Wallace place, and she would be relieved of the unpleasantness of angering Hank Butler by refusing to go with him. Hank had come on the 27th to tell her that there would be a party and that he would come by for her if she liked; but Hope had left the matter in midair by saying she'd let him know before the first. Now, she was grateful to the lowering elements.

Andy and Dave, had pitched into the clearing on the day after Christmas. "Can't lose a minute," Andy said. "What we get cleared now will be where we gather next fall. Every inch means that much more crop." So, even on that first day after Christmas, they ate breakfast by lamplight and were at work before sun-up. Now they were settled, ready, faced with the big job. They had a house, a barn, a team, a well, wood for fireplace and cookstove, and they had a good stock of provisions, with the daily blessings of milk and butter. Bigelow Halleck had come for the calf on the 28th, and now they were getting more milk. "It was my black-necked Jersey that lost her calf," he had said. "She can take this one here, and you'll have more pay for your trouble in milkin'." The neighbors had done their part in getting the Iveses ready for their start, and now it was up to them.

It was slow work, and it laid an aching weariness in Andy's muscles, so that when he went to bed at night, right after supper, he lay there twitching and jerking, as if tortured muscles were writhing and snatching in protest. In the night Dave heard him groaning with a cramp in his leg, heard him stamping the cold floor with bare feet, trying to drive the knotting misery away. And sometimes Andy would yell out in the middle of the night, talking to the team; for they were using the mules both to drag brush into piles and to pull small stumps.

Getting up was the worst time for Dave. His shoulders and back ached like a jumping tooth, and he was sore in arms and legs. He knew how his father must feel, for his muscles and joints were older and had grown soft during his years with Mr. Jaynes. Dave saw how stooped he was when he first got up, and how stiffly he moved. And he saw too his determination not to complain. He heard Granny tell his mother and Hope not to sympathize with Andy. "He wants you to pretend to think he feels the way he pretends to feel," she said. "That's clear, I'm sure."

Dave knew that the first few days would be the worst. Soon he would begin to harden and toughen, and the aches and twitches would go away. If he kept it up, he'd grow stronger and tougher than life in Harbisonville would ever have made him. The same would be true of his father, only in his case it would take longer.

"The first hundred years are the hardest," Andy would say as they stopped to rest, after sawing down a tree. "After that, you have an easy time."

"A fellow deserves it then!" Dave thought each time. But he usually said something light and easy, belittling work and consequent pain. "I'd rather do this than to square dance!" or, "I've been more out of breath, playing basketball."

To that one Andy said: "Yes, but you were having fun then, and it was a part of school. You'll have to go to school next fall, Dave. I can't let you stay out any more than just to help me get started on this place."

"Yes, sir, I know it. But that's next fall. Grab your saw handle; yonder's another tree waiting!"

"Son," Andy said, making no move toward the saw right then, for he had something to say, "people who get something good in life have to work hard for it. When it comes without work, there's not much to it, I reckon. And, after all, this is land we're earning; this is a part of the earth's surface we're trying to make our own!"

Dave looked at him. "That's why it's such a job. Land is the best thing, at the bottom of all things. We're working for the best possession a family can claim, Land."

Andy nodded. "That's right. You have good understanding for a boy of your age." He said it as a calm statement, not as a compliment. "A man is lucky to have a son like you."

Dave blushed and said, "Hey, pa, pin a rose on me!"

Rain Comes to The Wilderness

"Well, I mean it," Andy said, laughing dryly. "It's the truth. Now, about this land matter. I was thinking last night, trying to go to sleep, about all these people who have settled out here in the swamp. They came here, wanting farms and not able to buy them. They've worked hard and are still working hard, earning this land. It cost each of us just a few dollars for the homesteading fee, but that doesn't make it free land." He shook his head slowly, looking out over the area to be cleared. "Dave, no land is free! If you make it yours, you've got to buy it one way or another, and money is the easiest way to buy things."

Now, after their good start at the clearing, just as they were getting over the hump and were beginning to feel that the worst time had nearly passed, the rain came—the slow, determined rain that made the leafless trees look black and gaunt and slick, that drummed without changing its tone all day and all night. The cow at the barn lowed sadly for her calf. Bugler shivered in his barrel bed under the edge of the house.

Andy walked the floor and watched the unchanging clouds. This loss of time, when there was so much to be done, was a dreadful thing! Here he was, penned up in the house, and not more than garden space cleared! Acres of growth stood waiting for the saw and the axes. Below the surface there were roots to be grubbed out; and where the thickets of saplings stood, there would be masses of tough roots woven and sprangling like tough, live ropes holding the earth tightly. But it was raining, and he must sit and await the pleasure of the elements!

Mr. Flipp came on the third day of the rain. Apparently, he had just walked over for a sociable call. He came backing into the door as he swung his old black felt hat widely to fling water off it. "Hey, y'all got a radio?" he asked. "I want to git a weather reeport. I wouldn't be s'prised if we had some rain soon."

Otter
By... Reddy Kilowatt

This is the time of year I get scared! Yes sir, I'm not kidding you, every time I see a hunter with a gun I start to worry. Hunting is great sport, and most hunters know what they're doing. But even so, in Minnesota alone accidents caused by guns and drownings last year took 192 lives!

And that isn't all. There's one incident on record where hunters were peppering away at POWER-LINE insulators for target practice. They hit the insulators and the lights went out in a nearby farm house where a seven-year-old girl was alone with four younger children.

The little girl tried to light a lantern with a piece of burning paper, dropped her torch, and started a fire which destroyed the home and took the lives of three of the children. So I guess you can see why I get jumpy when I seen anyone with a gun.

Duane (Bud) Poole

Of course, carelessness with electricity is just as bad as carelessness with a gun. That's the reason the folks at the Otter Tail Power Company recently appointed a full-time Safety Director. Mr. Duane Poole is his name, but all you folks who knew him as a Service Representative at Bemidji will remember him as Bud. Bud's job will be to carry out a system-wide Safety Program.

Some other things have been happening around the Otter Tail Power Company lately, too. The other day Mr. T. C. Wright (that's the president but most folks call him Tom), called me in his office. "Reddy," he says, "I'd like for you to put a little note in your column next month about some important changes we've made."

Well, the upshot of the whole thing was that I'm going to give you folks better service than ever before. And, as a starter, the Otter Tail folks are creating five divisions. Vern Sprague is Division Manager at Fergus Falls, George Davidson at Morris, Jim Payton at Bemidji, Fred Greenagel at Jamestown and Bob Dyson at Devils Lake.

Each Division will also have a Division Engineer. "This is the first step toward increasing the number of our line crews," Tom told me, "and placing more of our maintenance and construction people at strategic points throughout the 50,000 square miles which we serve. Which in turn means constantly improved electric service for our customers."

Say, I almost forgot one other reason October is important! It's just 70 years ago this month that Thomas A. Edison invented the electric light. Before that time I didn't have any nose!

RED CROSS CHAPTERS MEET VARIED NEEDS OF SERVICEMEN

"My boy wants to come home, but he hasn't got the money for such an expensive trip," the old gentleman said. "He has just returned from 2 years overseas service and is getting a leave before reassignment. His mother has been very sick and I think he might help her to get well. We are living on our family allowance and whatever money my son can send, but I've scraped together this $25. Can you give me enough more to bring him home?"

After verifying the facts, the Home Service worker sent a telegram to the Red Cross field director at the boy's camp, telling of the father's request and of the offer of the twenty-five dollars he could so ill afford. The following day she received an answering wire from the field director:

"Return twenty-five dollars to father. Army granting emergency leave and arranging for air transportation home. We are arranging for maintenance and return transportation."

It was only one item in a busy worker's day, but to two old people and a long-absent son it meant a lot.

Often the need is not for financial aid but for help with the unexpected problems that may hit any family and are more acute when the head of the family is thousands of miles away.

It was so with an Air Force sergeant who reenlisted after overseas combat service. He left his wife and children in Kentucky on a farm with his mother-in-law. He also left 25 head of cattle, through which the family income would be supplemented. He thought his family secure for the 3 years of his new enlistment. Then disaster struck. The wife's mother became ill and was compelled to sell the farm and go to live with a distant sister. This left the sergeant's family without housing, and 25 head of cattle without care.

The Red Cross helped the soldier get emergency leave, helped him find suitable living quarters for his wife, and arranged for quick sale of his livestock. The sergeant then returned to duty, content in the knowledge that his wife and two small children were provided for.

Often, the need for help extends beyond the time a man is separated from the service. If, as a veteran, the man and his family continue to need aid, the chapter is ready to help.

That is Red Cross Home Service—a friend and counselor to the perplexed, to those in need, to men and women with problems.

Under federal statute and regulations of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, the American Red Cross furnishes volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of the armed forces and acts in matters of voluntary relief and as a medium of communication between the people of the United States and their armed forces.

"Things Are Better For Us ... marketing through Land O'Lakes"

... says Henry Stordahl, sweet-potato of the McIntosh, Minn. Co-op Creamery

"Things are better for us farmers than they were before there was a LAND O'LAKES to help us with our marketing," says Mr. Stordahl. "Now we get all that it is possible to get from our products. But even more important, I'm sure of a steady market, and I share in real savings every step of the way.

"I've been a farmer for a long time, and I know that for fair dealing there's nothing like having a strong, cooperative organization of your own—LAND O'LAKES.

"The Woman's Hour", a weekly broadcast over radio station K. T. R. F., beginning Friday, October 21st, at 10:45 A. M., and each following Friday at the same hour. These programs are sponsored by three circuits of the Woman's Missionary Federation of the Evangelical Lutheran Church namely: Clearwater, Crookston, and Thief River Falls.

The first four programs will consist of a series of transcriptions on Christian Nurture by Mrs. Lawrence Stavig, wife of the President of Augustana College, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

Christian Nurture for our families is not a complicated affair, it is just plain everyday Christian teaching and living. There is one requirement, if we are to teach and lead our boys and girls in the Christian way of life, we ourselves must know and live it. This series of programs will give us food for thought.

Brandt Explains Oleo. Problem

You have undoubtedly followed the general procedure with respect to the proposed legislation in Congress which has for its purpose the repeal of all Federal regulations concerning color and taxation of oleomargarine that is manufactured and offered for sale to the consuming public. This legislation is bitterly opposed by dairymen, and their opposition is justified from the standpoint of production of the industry and the consuming public against fraud in the sale of colored oleomargarine in imitation of butter.

The battle between dairymen and manufacturers of oleomargarine is one of long standing. In the early stages of legislative action to curb the practice of the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in imitation of butter it was not difficult to accomplish as at the time the consuming public seemed to be as much interested in protecting themselves as were the dairymen in protecting their interests. Therefore, the combined influence of consumers and dairy producers was brought to bear in passing the legislation now in existence, and about the only complaint in opposition to existing legislation came from oleomargarine manufacturers.

The oleomargrine people had much at stake and began early to contribute to a fund that has grown to tremendous proportions with which to finance the dissemination of propaganda designed to arouse resentment on the part of consumers against what they claimed was unfair taxation of a food product, while the emphasis should have been on the fact that the 10c tax was only applicable when oleomargarine was manufactured and colored yellow and sold in that color.

Be that as it may, we as dairymen and consumers are now faced with having to battle out a legislative proposal which is backed by a well financed propaganda program that has the support of many consumers who have been convinced that they are being unjustly taxed when they buy oleomargarine. These manufacturers of oleomargarine do not say that the tax is only applicable to oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter. We maintain that the color yellow is a common law trademark that butter has established and maintained ever since the manufacture of butter was first discovered and that the color tardemark is a protection to both producer and consumer.

The producers of dairy products must bear the responsibility of maintaining their rights in protecting the industry as well as the consumer, and whatever is done in this respect will be effective only to the extent that the dairymen provide the funds with which to finance the necessary educational and legislative program that will result in fair deal legislation to both producer and consumer.

The National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation has spearheaded most of the action on protective dairy legislation in the past and is preparing to assume the major responsibility for what lies ahead. With this in mind the Executive Committee, at their meeting in Chicago held on Sept 8th outlined a program for the collection of funds that will be necessary to carry on the legislative and educational battle against well financed oleomargarine propaganda machine. They felt that it would not be too much to ask each dairyman to contribute One Dollar to this fund. In fact, they were firmly of the opinion that it would be the best dollar any dairyman ever spent for the benefit of both himself and the consumer. With this in mind it was decided to ask each of the member associations of the National Co'op Milk Producers Federation to accept the responsibility of collecting the dollar from each dairy farmer who takes up the collective memberships of various organizations.

The Land O'Lakes Creameries has chosen the method of requesting the Boards of Directors of all its member associations to make a dollar dednction from the dairy settlement check with the understanding that if any farmer does not acquience in this deduction, his dollar will be returned to him upon request. Other members of the Federation will use somewhat similar methods.

Therefore, the Land O'Lakes Creameries urgently requests that your organization put this method into effect and forward the funds so collected to Land O'Lakes at Minneapolis, which in turn will be made part of the national fund that will be used to finance the educational and legislative proceedure to protect the interests of both the consumer and producer of dairy products.

John Brandt.
President of Land O'Lskes Creameries.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Control Atom, Keep Alert: Baruch; Senate Clashes on Price Supports; U. S. Seeks Method to End Strikes

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

A-CONTROL:

'Truly Effective'

After President Truman's announcement on September 23 of an atomic explosion in Russia, U.S. citizens worked up a kind of peculiar, detached tension that seemed to have been born out of the expectation that somebody—maybe Bernard Baruch—ought to say something significant pretty soon about the world and the atom bomb.

And Mr. Baruch, who is the author of the plan for international atomic control that was rejected by the Soviets in 1946, measured up to the demand for an opinion by coming out with what looked to be some practical suggestions.

PRIMARILY, he urged that "nothing less than a truly effective" system of international control be put into effect.

He supplemented this major point with three other recommendations as to how to face up to the Russian atom:

1. Pending such "safe and sure" control, make every effort "to maintain our overwhelming advantage" in the development of atomic weapons.

2. Re-examine our strategy for peacemaking.

3. Enact a standby mobilization plan, including civilian defense, immediately.

BASIC IDEA, of course, is for the U.S. to do its moral best with the olive branch, but in the meantime keeping a gun handy, just in case.

Russia's counter-proposal to international control—the outlawing of the bomb and international agreements to destroy all existing stocks of the atom bomb—oversimplifies the problem, Baruch said.

HE WARNED that a would-be aggressor easily could divert "peaceful" atomic material to "international blackmail and destruction."

STRIKES:

Economy Throttled

The history making double basic-industry strikes—coal and steel—were rapidly throttling the nation's economy as the first week of the twin work stoppage drew to a close, causing:

1. The layoff of about 100,000 white collar workers whose clerical services no longer were needed.

2. Furlough of 49,829 railroad men.

3. Curtailment of Packard motor company operations.

4. Reduction of steel output to an anemic 8.2 per cent of capacity.

5. Daily loss of 30 million dollars worth of business in the steel and coal industries alone.

6. Daily loss of 11 million dollars in wages to nearly 900,000 striking steel and soft coal workers.

President Truman had indicated that he planned no direct government intervention in the strikes, but Federal Mediator Cyrus Ching was trying to figure out a new attempt to settle the disputes.

With the steel mills and coal mines idle, Ching's massive problem was to find a workable solution first of all to the pension demands of Murray's United Steelworkers and Lewis' United Mine Workers. Making it more difficult was the fact that neither the industry leaders nor the unions were in mood to make any concessions.

An added grim note was sounded by Philip Murray, CIO leader, when he warned that still another 500,000 of his steelworkers would be going on strike by the end of October unless the company-financed six-cent pension and four-cent insurance program was accepted by the steel industry.

PERCENTERS:

5, That Is

What happened to the 5 per center inquiry that was hotter than a two-dollar deep freeze box a month or two ago?

According to Senator Hoey (D., N.C.), who heads the special senate subcommittee which studied whether federal buying was improperly influenced, the probe probably won't be resumed this year; although the senator indicated that he might release a report on it soon.

"FOR ALL practical purposes the investigations already is completed," said Hoey.

However, the subcommittee was still waiting to get the testimony of James V. Hunt and David Bennett, both of whom were described as being too ill to take the stand.

Hunt is the Washington management counselor who allegedly collected fat fees for his help in seeking government contracts for others. He was the one who said, "All I have to sell is influence."

Bennett is head of the Chicago perfume house which footed the bill for several home freezers presented in 1945 to Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan.

Confidences

Trygve Lie (left), secretary general of the United Nations, chats with Bernard Baruch at dinner during which Lie received the third annual award of the American Association for the United Nations for distinguished service to the U.N.

HIGH SUPPORTS:

Good or Bad?

Despite worried administration warnings against setting farm price suports so high as to "price the farmer out of the market," the senate went ahead to hit a new parity ceiling for six basic groups.

Senators Young (R., N.D.) and Russell (D., Ga.) spearheaded the successful drive for an amendment to peg support prices on wheat, cotton, rice, corn, tobacco and peanuts at 90 per cent of parity. Previous support prices on those crops had been 75 per cent of parity.

SEN. SCOTT LUCAS of Illinois, senate Democratic leader and voice of the administration in this case, had opposed the Young-Russell amendment to Sen. Clinton Anderson's bill and had fully expected that it would be defeated in the senate.

But after a lusty battle, the measure was sent back to the agriculture committee where attempts were made to work out a compromise.

Senators Anderson, Aiken and Lucas had argued that a high-support measure, keeping food prices high, might one day cause consumers to rebel and possibly throw out the entire price support program.

Backers of the 90 per cent parity legislation contended that any serious lag in farm prices could set off a depression affecting the whole national economy.

THERE MATTERS stood for the time being. Prior to the senate fight on the support bill, however, Sen. Scott Lucas had delivered himself of an opinion that could, under the right circumstances, turn out to be prophetic:

"When the government continues to subsidize a little more and a little more all the time—without sticking to a farm program dealing with the basic commodities that can be controlled—you are taking a chance that the whole thing may be struck down."

BIRTHDAY:

U. N.'s Fourth

October 24 is United Nations Day.

The organization, wherein repose the hopes for peace of all free and thinking men, is just four years old—four years old as the passage of time goes, but already ageless in its experience and the good it has accomplished.

WHAT HAS THE United Nations done since it first convened during the immediate aftermath of World War II in 1945?

First of all, it has constantly kept the hope and prospect of peace alive in the minds of the world's people. It has come to mean, to the common man, a functioning object lesson that "working it out is better than shooting it out."

The U.N. already has definitely stopped three wars—in India, in Palestine and Indonesia.

IT IS LEADING millions of non-self-governing territories toward the realization of self-government.

On the basis of the best evidence, the U.N. has contributed enormously toward the job of keeping the peace won through the bloodshed of World War II.

The birthday of the United Nations—October 24—is a day to fix in memory. Odds are that in terms of human achievement and benefit and the dignity of man, history will write that date as being one of unparalleled significance and importance.

Border Backfire

When the Russians eased their border travel restrictions at Frankfurt, Germany, to draw west Germans into the Soviet zone for Communist "Peace Day" demonstrations, the results were reminiscent of the fabled halfback with the pointed head who ran 90 yards for a touchdown—the wrong way.

Thousands of eastern Germans poured into the western zone, while only about 500 went the other way.

Household Hints

Saving Potatoes

The waste incurred when potatoes are peeled can be minimized by boiling the potatoes in their skins, and then peeling them while holding them under a stream of cold water.

Lunch-Packing Tomatoes

If tomatoes are to be packed in a lunch basket or to be taken on picnics, don't keep them in a refrigerator. Once a tomato is chilled, it turns soft and wrinkled when it returns to room temperature.

Avoid Carrot Stains

To avoid yellow stains on your hands when peeling carrots, peel them under water.

JUST JESTING

Reason Enough

It was a big funeral and everybody was there. Kaplan had already filled two handkerchiefs with his tears and was half-way through the third.

"Kaplan," said Greenberg, "I didn't know that rich man was a relative of yours."

"He ain't," sobbed Kaplan. "Vhy do you suppose I'm cryink?"

Deadlock

Victim—"I'll make a bargain with you. I'll give you all my money if you'll give me that pistol."

Robber—"Okay."

Victim (now in possession of gun)—"Give me that money back or I'll blast you to hell."

Robber—"You'll have to get some bullets first."

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Andy Ives and his family make a new home in the wilderness, facing various difficulties. For their first Christmas, Hank Butler brings them a wild turkey, an illegal bird. Big Halleck, handsome young man to whom Andy's daughter, Hope, is attracted, stops by to wish them a merry Christmas. Mrs. Webster, a neighbor with a barbed tongue, recognizes the turkey as a wild one and is resentful when Mrs. Ives refrains from telling her from where it came. Hope and her brother, Dave, bring a Christmas dinner to Deefy, a Negro halfwit living in the extreme swampland who unwittingly did Andy a favor. Following the holiday, the rains begin.

CHAPTER XVII

Dave laughed. Andy forced a sickly grin, for there wasn't much humor in connection with this downpour. Kate said: "Come in and take a chair and try to cheer Andy up a little. This is about to get him."

"Obliged." Absalom Flipp sat before the fire, slipped off his gum boots, and warmed his bony, sockless feet. He viewed Andy sadly. "Don't let this little sprinkle bother you. Look what ol' Noah had to put up with!"

"And I can sympathize with him too!" Andy said feelingly.

"That was a mess!" Mr. Flipp pulled on his right boot. "Say, that musta been a ter-ble big barge Noah built, if he put two of a kind of ever'thing on it! Think of the cages an' pens an' stalls he had to make!"

"What does Mr. Eliot think of that?" Hope asked.

Mr. Flipp made a snorting sound. "That ol' man hoots at it! Him an' Brother Cowann had it 'round and 'round one day, 'bout Noah an' the ark. He said it was a fairy tale, an' Brother Cowann said if it wasn't so it wouldn't be in the Bible. An' that's what I think 'bout it." He pulled on his other boot. "But they's jest one question ol' man Eliot asks that I can't git a good answer to."

"What's that?" Andy inquired.

"He says that if the whole world was under water, how did Noah save the animals that didn't live in his part of the world. Like polar bears. How'd he git hold of them, 'way up there in the Arkit Circle?"

"The 'Arctic' Circle," Granny corrected him.

"Yes'm, that's whut I said." Mr. Flipp said, looking at her solemnly.

Granny sniffed sharply.

"Course, I tell Mr. Eliot that maybe they wasn't any Polar bears back in them days. It's the best way out that I can think up."

"What's Mr. Eliot doing today?" Andy asked. "He can't see after his trotline or his nets in this rain."

"Oh, he reads on rainy days, an' when he gits tired of that he sets in to sawin' on his fiddle. He got strung out last night on a olden-times fiddler named Pickaninny, an' tol' me all about him."

"You must mean 'Paganini,'" Granny offered meekly, but there was a triumphant light in her eyes. Surely she had him this time!

"Yes'm," Mr. Flipp said, "that's exactly whut I called him." Then, before Granny could marshal her scattered forces, he changed the subject. "Jessie Bell's got another batch o' pups," he announced mournfully. "They's seb'm this time, dang her hide!"

"Well, what do you know!" Dave exclaimed.

Andy said, 'H'm!' and eyed the caller suspiciously. Now he knew the real reason for Mr. Flipp's visit! "What are these, fullblood hounds or—?"

"They're jest a dern mixtry!" Mr. Flipp broke in. But he brightened quickly. "Oh, they're nice pups, an' they'll grow up to have good noses. Don't you werry 'bout that."

"I won't," Andy said dryly.

Mr. Flipp looked at Dave. "They's one white-an'-black-spotted little feller that's awful cute. You'll like him."

Soon after letting fall this hint of his impending generosity, the lank woodsman left. Head lowered against the rain, he walked with long, loose steps along the dim, winding way that led into the woods.

"Is it lightning in the north?" Granny asked. "That might be a sign of cooler weather."

"Can't tell. Seems to be, from all around. But it's going to do something, and anything's better than this."

"A cyclone isn't," Mrs. Craig said firmly.

Stormy Weather Stops All Work

The worst storm broke just before daylight came struggling through. The wind screamed among the bare, cold branches, whipping and lashing them until, in the bright lightning, they looked like some mad artist's etchings come alive. Andy felt the house tremble, heard it pop under the strain of the racing gusts. New leaks appeared as the wind rose, and in places water came through the walls. Toward dawn the length of stovepipe above the roof was torn loose and blown into the woods. Andy heard it go with a clatter into nearby branches, and guessed what it was.

They cooked breakfast that morning on the fireplace. Hope asked her father if he hadn't better round up an altimeter somewhere. "We may be air-borne at just any time if this keeps up" she said.

They ate breakfast, each trying to make light of the elemental carryings-on, but no one felt very gay. Granny possibly took the prize with her wish that Gertrude and Wilton could have spent last night with them.

"We'll have to invite old Wilton down," Andy said grimly. "Dave and I will need a lot of help when we get started at our clearing again."

"I can just see those two walking from the highway out here" Kate said. "Wouldn't they be a dismal pair?"

Granny shrugged. "And we'd give a party for them, with our neighbors in to square dance! Fancy Wilton and Gertrude cutting an old-fashioned rug with Mr. and Mrs. Webster and Will Darnley and wife! It would be a sight to remember!"

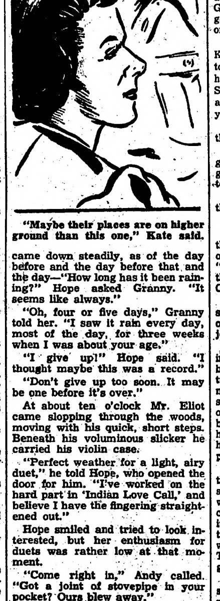
The wind remained gusty, and thunder rumbled in the distance. The air was warm and heavy. Rain came down steadily, as of the day before and the day before that, and the day—"How long has it been raining?" Hope asked Granny. "It seems like always."



"Maybe their places are on higher ground than this one," Kate said.

"Oh, four or five days," Granny told her. "I saw it rain every day, most of the day, for three weeks when I was about your age."

"I give up!" Hope said. "I thought maybe this was a record."

At about ten o'clock Mr. Eliot came slopping through the woods, moving with his quick, short steps. Beneath his voluminous slicker he carried his violin case.

"Perfect weather for a light, airy duet," he told Hope, who opened the door for him. "I've worked on the hard part in 'Indian Love Call,' and believe I have the fingering straightened out."

Hope smiled and tried to look interested, but her enthusiasm for duets was rather low at that moment.

Flood Worries Are Allayed

"No, but Mr. Flipp and I have some extra joints at our cabin. We can fix you right up, as a glib slangster would say. Hello, Mrs. Craig and Mrs. Ives. How are you, Dave?" And he came bustling in to the fireplace, where he spent a full minute in wiping water from his violin case and his glasses. "My annual vacation is now beginning. Without pay, of course."

"You're through fishing for a while, I'd guess," Andy said. "The bayou's rising pretty fast, isn't it?"

"Very fast. It is half full this morning, and the current is racing."

"Reckon it'll get out of its banks?" Andy asked worriedly.

"Oh, yes. In a few days it will be out in the low places. But," he added comfortingly, "you don't need to worry yet; your house is on a rise."

"But there's low ground between here and the highway. Won't that be under water?"

"Undoubtedly," Mr. Eliot answered. "Oh, but it happens every spring. It's quite normal. You'd better lay in a full stock of provisions, in case you are marooned for a time."

Hope gasped and looked at her mother, who was staring at the calm old fellow who could deal so easily with such stern realities.

"We'd better build a boat," Dave said.

"An excellent idea," Mr. Eliot commended him. "Every family out here should have a boat or two lying around at this season." He opened the violin case and lovingly removed his instrument. He went to the piano and struck a key, plucked a string. It was very easy to see that the threatening flood was far less important than music, in Emerson Eliot's opinion.

"Soon as it slacks up," Andy told Kate, "I'm going to town and get some things. We may turn out to be a gang of Robinson Crusoes before long!"

Kate went at once to the kitchen and began checking supplies. A cold, gnawing fear was growing in her. She had never lived where high water was a threat. For years, along in the spring when the papers carried stories of overflows down in the low country, tragic accounts of homes lost, of farms buried under sand, of drownings, deaths from disease, she had felt sorry for the people and wondered why anyone chose to make a home where such things happened. Now, Kate Ives was menaced by a flood!

Andy wandered into the kitchen. "Say, don't look so—"

But she turned on him. "Don't don't me, Andy Ives!" she ordered. "I'm scared — downright scared!"

"Oh, we won't drown, honey. Don't think the worst even before something bad has happened! What about the rest of the people here in the swamp? You think they'd stay here if there was danger?"

"Maybe their places are on higher ground than this one," Kate said. "Oh, I don't know, Andy; maybe it's because it's new to me, and because I've always had a horror of floods. Maybe that's it."

"I bet it is," Andy agreed. "Now, look, if there is a flood and if there's any danger at all, you and Hope and Granny can go to the nearest refugee camp, or back to Harbisonville on a visit."

"I'd take the refugee camp," Kate said flatly. "I wouldn't go back to Harbisonville and tell people we had been run out by high water!" She looked at him defiantly. "What about you and Dave? Where would you be?"

"We'd stay here and take care of things."

"We went into this thing together," Kate cut in. "It was for the good and the bad. We'll share it together."

Andy grinned happily. "You're the best, Kate! The very best!"

"Now, Andy!"

"Don't say I tell all the girls that." He took her hand, unmindful of the open door into the main room. "You're the only one I've ever said that to. It was lucky day when Kate Craig said yes to me!"

She gave his hand a quick little squeeze then and pulled away. "Go on, now, and let me finish up this job."

The sun rose clear the next morning, just as they were finishing breakfast. Andy and Dave could return to the clearing again. It might not be necessary to go to town for a stock of provisions. Maybe a stretch of clear weather now would let the bayou run down, Andy guessed hopefully. Anyway, the road would have to dry out a little before they put the wagon over it.

With axes and saw they left for the clearing. When they came in sight of the block—that is to say, it would be a block when they had cleaned it off—they found much of it standing with water. The lower third was a shimmering "slash" where the bright sun struck it. There were other flooded patches of ground scattered here and there.

"Looks easy to irrigate," Andy said. "I mean, it's cupped to hold water. Now, who'd have thought that, just to look at it when it was dry?"

"Well, we know what to clear and what not to clear," Dave said, with the air of one who is quick to make the best of things. "No use clearing a stretch that'll overflow. One big rain in summer would drown the crop out."

Andy and Dave Do Some Planning

"We'll clear that part too," Andy told him. "Studying it now, after this flood, we know what has to be drained. Come on, Dave, we'll drive stakes to mark the ditches we've got to dig to run water off."

First, though, they studied the lay of the land on the lower side and found the nearest low stretch that would carry water into the swale that led on down into the thick swamp. Andy waded the big slash, crisscrossing it until he had found the deepest part, and there he drove his first stake. Then they set a line of stakes leading down to the low stretch. Now they ran lines of markers from the smaller depressions into the largest one.

"First chance," Andy said, "we'll dig some ditches to handle water. And some day we may get a tractor to come in here and do some leveling for us."

"Whose?"

"Oh, it wouldn't matter," Andy said vaguely. "Just so it did the job."

Fewer Pedestrians Figure In 1948 Traffic Deaths

CHICAGO.—Fewer pedestrians walked themselves to death during 1948 than the year before.

There were 9,850 pedestrian traffic deaths last year, according to the 1949 edition of "Accident Facts," statistical yearbook of the National Safety Council. This was 6 per cent below the 1947 total of 10,450.

The yearbook points out that last year was the first since motor vehicle deaths have been tabulated by type of accident that pedestrian deaths were fewer than deaths from two-vehicle collisions.

Old Pieces Beautify New Settings

ATTRACTIVE touches for your home may be dust-catching in the attic. A decorative solution for a problem corner or room may be buried in the storeroom.

That's the advice to housewives seeking to brighten home interiors given by the Rural Home editor of nationally circulated Capper's Farmer. So look over the family white elephant collection, she urges. Keep in mind changes are possible with a hammer, saw and paintbrush.

Bring the blue-and-white willow ware or patterned plates down from the top cupboard shelf. Arranged like those in the picture below they will draw admiring glances to the mantel. Five plates might be hung on a large bare-looking wall. There are brackets for hanging them. If you're lucky enough to own an old copper scrub pail, scour and polish it to the original brightness. Presto, you have a handsome kindling container.

Kitchen Efficiency

The ease with which you work in your kitchen depends a lot on cupboard and shelf arrangement, declares the Rural Home Editor of nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer, whose advice on household matters is read by 1,250,000 farm families. Just moving an isolated cabinet next to others can give a longer, continuous working counter. And it may put working centers in a better order with food storage, preparation and service centers next to each other. Rearrangement of cupboard shelves can save you from endless shuffling about of small and large articles.

Soil Tests Give Valuable Information About Land's Need for Lime and Plant Nutrients

Carefully-Taken Samples Give Clues to Soil's Nutrient Needs.

CHICAGO — Soil tests taken this fall can help you do a better job of liming and fertilizing your land and filling the soil's "commissary" with a well balanced supply of plant nutrients most needed for higher crop yields and lower per bushel costs next year.

A good soil test has to start with good samples, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out. That means making a sufficient number of probes. It means getting enough soil from different parts of the farm and combining samples from like areas. It means being careful to get good samples from poor-yielding fields.

On sloping fields, samples should be taken from the top, the middle and the bottom, the committee says.

You can get directions for taking soil samples from your county agent, from agronomists at the state college, or from your local fertilizer dealer.

When samples are efficiently taken, carefully tested and accurately interpreted, they can give you valuable information about your soil's plant nutrient needs. But you will want to consider additional facts in developing a program to boost your yields. Among items to consider are: What is the land's previous cropping history? What was the per acre yield? How has the soil been handled? What rotations have been followed? What fertilizer and liming treatment has the soil had? What is the land's slope and drainage and how badly is it eroded?

You can check on the plant food your crops are actually getting by watching for hunger signs on crops already produced this season. Using soil tests, cropping and land history and hunger signs will help you diagnose your soil's fertilizer needs.

Good Soil Management Plus Fertilizer Produces Championship Wheat and Heavy Stand of Legumes

After This Record-Breaking Wheat Yield Was Combined, the Field Produced a Thick, High-Yielding Legume Stand.

CHICAGO—Good soil management including the use of commercial fertilizer paid off for Harold Pirtle, when he won the 1949 wheat growing championship of Southwestern Indiana with a record-breaking yield of 57½ bushels per acre.

Growing the championship wheat crop wasn't the whole story, either. After combining the grain Pirtle got a lush stand of alfalfa and sweet clover. He says the soil's good tilth and organic matter supply plus the added plant food gave it the power to produce both a high wheat yield and an excellent stand of legumes.

Before seeding time last fall, Pirtle had the soil tested to find out its plant food needs. When he seeded the wheat and the accompanying legume crop, he added 400 pounds per acre of 3-12-12 fertilizer. Then early last spring he topdressed the wheat with extra nitrogen. The nitrogen gave the wheat new life and put extra vigor into the legume seeding.

The championship wheat was grown on an 11-acre contest field on his Sullivan county farm near here. The field was in alfalfa during 1945 and 1946, corn in 1947 and soybeans in 1948. The organic matter added by plowed-under alfalfa helped mellow the soil, built good structure and tilth and improved the drainage.

Pirtle used Vigo wheat, the new heavy-yielding, soft red winter variety developed by Purdue University plant breeders.

The "pocket area" wheat growing championship is sponsored by Purdue University and the Southwestern Indiana Wheat Improvement Association. Howard Lathrope, Purdue agronomist, supervises the contest.

Tollef Ellestad Laid to Rest

Tollef Ellestad, son of Erick and Guri Ellestad, was born in Houston County, Minn. on September 23, 1877. He was baptized and confirmed in the Lutheran faith by the Rev. S. S. Reque. He passed away suddenly on Wed. Oct. 12 from a heart attack.

On Nov. 26, 1902, he was united in marriage to Theoline Solum. To this union four children were born: Gladys, (Mrs. Charles Sedlacek of Warren); Leonard of Spring Grove; Tilford who passed away at the age of nine; and Gordon of Blue Earth.

He lived at Spring Grove until 1907. When land opened for homesteading in North Dakota, he took a claim near Elgin and was engaged in farming until 1914. From there he moved to Holt where he was engaged in the mercantile business and farming. In the spring of 1927 he moved back to Spring Grove.

When living in North Dakota he aided in organizing the first school district in that section and served as a member of the Board of Education at the Fleak school.

At Holt he was a member of the school board and served as an officer of the Nazareth Lutheran church.

After serving as village marshall of Spring Grove from 1931 to 1939 he was elected constable in 1940 which position he held at the time of his death. He was a member of the Sons and Daughters of Norway lodge and held the position as financial secretary for several years.

The past years he has worked for the Minnesota Highway Department, mostly as a carpenter.

Survivors include his wife and children, Gladys, Leonard and Gordon; five grandchildren, one great-grand-child; three sisters, Amelia, (Mrs. A. Wisness) of Watford City, N. D.; Clara Ellestad of Spring Grove and Nellie, Mrs. O. H. Nohre of Holt.

Funeral services were held on Monday, Oct, 17th from the home and from Trinity N. E. L. Church and the body interred in Trinity Lutheran Cemetery. Rev. O. Mikkelson officiated.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Now They're Sitting Pretty

Squint Miller, who's working as a telephone lineman, was telling me about some birds that got into a fight with his company.

Seems a couple of woodpeckers set up housekeeping in a telephone pole. Nobody minded them living there, but they kept pecking at the wires—causing one short circuit after another.

Finally, the telephone people—who had nothing personal against the birds—just stopped up the hole where they lived. But they kept coming back. At last, the company donated that pole to the woodpeckers and set up a brand-new one for their own use!

From where I sit, we'd all be better off if we were as tolerant with our own kind as that telephone outfit was with the woodpeckers. Let's consider the other fellow's point of view—whether it's his right to live where he wants, or to enjoy a friendly glass of temperate beer or ale when and if he pleases.

Curtain Fabrics

Continuous exposure to sunlight weakens curtain fabrics. Such fabrics become weakened in the lower areas faster than at the top where they are protected by shades. To counteract the effect of Old Sol's rays, use tailored curtains with equal size hems, top and bottom, so the ends may be reversed after laundering.

Douglas Fir Nursery

In the Douglas fir region of the Pacific Northwest the principal deterrent to natural reseeding of harvested forest land is fire. In order to reforest fire scarred areas the private timber operators of the Douglas fir region grow many millions of seedling trees annually.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Harvest This Year Second Largest In U.S. History, Government Says; Reds Purge Czech Property-Owners

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

HARVEST:

Second Largest

America's horn of plenty continued to go all out in its production of food for the world.

Latest crop summary of the U.S. department of agriculture showed that good harvest weather would assure the nation of its second largest volume of crops in history, topped only by the record-breaking haul of 1948.

EQUALLY important was the fact that a record supply of corn was on tap for producing meat, dairy and poultry products.

The month of September brought conditions sufficiently favorable to boost total production prospects 1 per cent, despite a slight decline in the corn estimate. Total crop volume was indicated at 131 per cent of the 1923-1932 base level, second only to last year's 137 per cent.

However, present indications are that this may be the last year for some time that crop production reaches such astronomical heights. As surpluses were mounting almost alarmingly, the government was preparing to take action to reduce output next year.

There was every likelihood that market quotas would be slapped on some of the basic crops which have been overflowing into storage in recent years.

THIS YEAR'S huge output is the result of fairly large production of most individual crops, rather than record-breaking yields of just a few.

Nearly 128 million tons of livestock-feed grains are being produced this year, including a corn crop of about 3.47 billion bushels. Last year's corn crop of 3.65 billion bushels set an all-time record.

The 36.5 billion tons of food grains now estimated, though exceeded in each of the past three seasons, is greater than in any earlier year. Included in this figure is a bumper wheat crop of 1.12 billion bushels, virtually all of which has been harvested.

Witness

Admiral Arthur W. Radford took the stand before the house armed services committee to testify that current defense plans and military setup relegate the navy to a role "useless and inadequate" in the event of an atomic war.

CONGRESS:

Half a Loaf

The first session of the 81st congress headed toward an October adjournment with less than half of President Truman's program written into law.

Left as unfinished business for the 1950 congressional campaign, however, were a number of highly controversial proposals among the 22 requests that Mr. Truman had laid before the present session without getting final action.

Chief among these is the Taft-Hartley act repeal, which was turned down in both houses during this session. The President undoubtedly will revive the issue in January, and the outcome this time may depend upon how some special elections this year to fill senate and house vacancies turn out.

SOME OF THE other requests which Mr. Truman is almost sure to re-introduce early next year will be for a system of compulsory health insurance, civil rights legislation, standby price-wage controls and the passage of "Point 4" legislation to guarantee U.S. support in developing backward areas of the world.

PAY BOOST:

For Cabinet

There was good news for cabinet members, who have been plugging along at the same old salary ever since 1925.

A joint senate-house conference managed to arrive at an agreement to boost cabinet members' salaries from $15,000 to $22,500 a year.

THE CONGRESSIONAL group also approved pay raises for some 200 other top-drawer federal officials—at a cost of $1,087,000 annually.

In addition to raising cabinet salaries, the pay bill will:

GRANT Undersecretary of Defense Steve Early $20,000 a year instead of $14,500, and the armed-forces secretaries $18,000 a year instead of $14,000.

Most of the undersecretaries of the various departments will go up from $10,330 to $17,500. J. Edgar Hoover who, as head of the FBI, now receives $14,000 will get a raise to $16,000.

CZECH PURGE:

Slow Terror

Slow terror, the kind that eventually is born in persons living under any totalitarian government, was seeping through Communist Czechoslovakia.

Cause of it was a Red purge, aimed primarily at supposed bourgeois elements, but leaving no man—be he a Communist party member or not—free from the fear that he may become a victim sooner or later.

UNCONFIRMED reports of the total seized or marked for arrest in the Communist police roundups ranged between 30,000 and 40,000. No information was being given, either as to causes, results or any other details of the widespread arrests.

The pattern of the purge was clear. Landlords, architects, confectioners and other small shopkeepers were being picked up and their business confiscated. In some cases, their apartments were seized and families dispossessed.

In the main, it was a drive against Czechoslovakia's propertied classes, theoretically the mortal enemies of Marxist communism.

HOWEVER, the prosecution of the property owners was accompanied throughout Bohemia and Moravia by purges of government employees, the clergy, army and even the Communist ranks. Charges, where there were any, ranged from high treason and sympathy with Titoism or "western imperialism" to simple denunciations by snoopers who had overheard suspicious bits of conversation.

Possible hint as to the reason behind the purge was the report that the government is having trouble not only in its campaign to control the Roman Catholic church, but also its efforts to prod higher production out of the workers.

CHINESE REDS:

Win Diplomats

Was it a case of rats deserting a sinking ship?

That might have been a plausible construction of the move as Chinese diplomatic-staff members in Paris deserted to the Communist regime at Peking and called on Chinese diplomats throughout the world to follow their example.

GEORGE MONG, counselor of the Paris embassy, made the announcement. He reported that 11 diplomats, eight from the embassy and three from the consulate had walked out on Chiang Kai-shek and the Nationalist government at Canton.

The development posed a problem for the French foreign ministry's Asiatic affairs section. They were particularly concerned by the threat of a rebel sit-in at the embassy. However, the issue was resolved when the French moved firmly to back up the Nationalists and struck the dissident Chinese envoys off its diplomatic list.

THE FRENCH difficulty was clear. While Paris still recognized the Nationalist government, it was becoming increasingly apparent that the western powers eventually may recognize the Communist regime of Mao Tze-tung. Already there have been conversations on that subject.

Story of $200-Bills Trips Up Gambler

It was not the first case where unfamiliarity with big money had tripped up an individual who was attempting to finagle with it, but navy petty officer James G. Stratton, New York, might have made his story stick had he known more about money when he reported to police he'd been robbed. He said a tall, thin, mustachioed man held a knife to his back and took $31,500 from him while he and spectators stood helpless to do anything.

The robbery, Stratton told police occurred on a Grand Central subway platform. He even showed officers where the holdup man's knife had cut his shirt and undershirt. Then it all came out. He had lost all of the $31,500 but $500 in gambling while his wife thought he had it safely stored away.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Andy Ives, his wife, Kate; daughter, Hope; son Dave, and mother-in-law Granny, move to southern Arkansas on a tract of free land which they must cultivate to keep. A neighbor, Hank Butler, presents them with a wild turkey for Christmas and rather than offend him, they eat the illegal bird. Another neighbor, Mrs. Webster, recognizes the turkey as being a wild one, and is resentful when she fails to find out from where it came. Hope and Dave celebrate the holiday by bringing a turkey dinner to Deefy, a negro halfwit living in the extreme swampland, who unwittingly did Andy a favor. The rains come and Andy is worried about a possible flood.

CHAPTER XVIII

Andy was whistling contentedly as they walked back to the little cleared patch to resume the work that the rain had interrupted.

"Yonder's Mr. Flipp," Dave said. "He's walking pretty fast."

"For him, yes," Andy said. "Wouldn't set a record, though."

Mr. Flipp came on toward them. "Howdy, both," he said. "Sunshine feels good, don't it? Danged if I wasn't 'bout to mildew!"

"What's the news?" Andy inquired. He was sure that the droll trapper hadn't traipsed down there to pass the time of day or to watch him and Dave work. To Absalom Flipp, such labor was purest drudgery, a curse to body and a burden to soul. "Anything wrong?"

"Not yet. I thought you was goin' to town this mornin'."

"Well, I was, but it's so pretty we decided to work. I guess the bayou will run on off now, without backing out too much, won't it? You want a ride to town?"

Mr. Flipp ignored the question. "Ol' man Eliot told you yestiddy you'd better go stock up on provisions unless you've got plenty on hand. He said Miz Ives was makin' a list—"

"But he didn't tell me that, in case the rain stopped, the bayou would go high enough to cut us off from town," Andy broke in. "He didn't seem so concerned about it."

"Well, he wouldn't come right out an' tell you what to do," said Mr. Flipp gently. "I wouldn't either. He figgered he had made it plain, though. He didn't tell me so, but I'm shore that's whut he figgered."

"All right, advise me," Andy begged. "I'm green here. What do you think I'd better do?"

"You'd better git in yore waggin an' go to town an' stock up," Mr. Flipp told him. "An' you'd better bring back some planks fer a boat. You'd better find out whur the stock an' cattle are to be drove to, in case things git bad. The bayou's risin' fast. They's a lot of water comin' down from up the country. By the time you git back here from town, you'll be drivin' through shallow water from the bayou. By mornin', it'll be so deep you won't want to drive it, for you couldn't make out the road."

Andy's head wheeled under this assault of facts. Since last night when the change in the weather had come, he had felt free and easy concerning the bayou. This morning his confidence had been at a peak: He and Dave could get back to work, and all was well! Now, danger was more imminent than ever!

"Hadn't we better leave the mules and the cow at Newcastle this afternoon?" he asked. "We could tie the cow to the wagon and lead her in. Somebody there will be in charge of keeping stock, I guess."

"You'll have time to take care of that," Mr. Flipp assured him. "In the next couple of days, if the bayou's still risin' fast, you'll know whut to do." He turned to start away, then stopped. "You needn't git more'n the planks an' nails fer the boat. Ol' man Eliot an' me have got pitch an' oakum fer tightenin' the seams."

"Thanks," Andy said. "And I appreciate your coming down to tell me what to do about the water."

"Don't mention it."

The Lumberman Discourages Andy

"What'll you and Mr. Eliot do?" Andy wanted to know. "Your cabin is on lower ground than our place."

"Oh, we'll scaffold things up in the house an' lock up an' leave, I reckon. I had to do it once, 'fore the ol' man took up with me. They's a refugee camp at the Fair Groun's in Newcastle whenever a flood comes along."

Andy and Dave drove to town that afternoon. When they crossed the bayou, which had been low and clear and slow of current on their previous crossings, they were amazed to find it racing and boiling now, lapping at the underside of the bridge stringers.

"How'll we ever get to the refugee camp if the bridge washes away?" Dave asked. "We'll be cut off."

"They'll rig up a ferry, I guess," Andy told him. "Anyway, don't worry about having to go to the camp. You heard Mr. Flipp say that he has had to leave his cabin only once because of water. Our house is on higher ground than his."

"Maybe this will be even higher water than the one that drove Mr. Flipp out," Dave worried.

"Leave such worrying to the women, son. You and I will have to see after things, including them; and if we start stewing and looking scared, it'll be bad around the Ives place!"

"I don't think Granny will be scared," Dave said. "She's pretty hard to scare."

Andy nodded. "She's O.K. Now, listen here: If things do get bad we'll have to persuade the womenfolk to go to the camp in town at least a day or two ahead of us. You help me out on that."

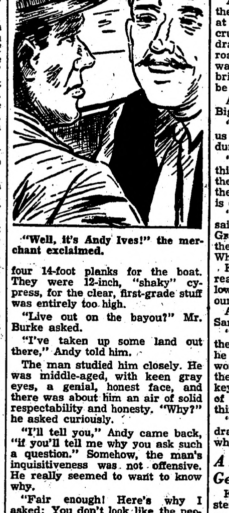
They made their purchases in town with as much speed as possible. From the grocer, Andy learned that the refugee camp was being set up, and that the sheriff had appointed a man to oversee the care and feeding of stock brought in from the lowlands.

"Who is he?" Andy asked. "I may have to turn a few head over to him."

"I think it's Sig Flanagan," the grocer told him. "You can phone the sheriff's office and find out. Use my phone if you—"

"Thanks," Andy said. "No rush about calling."

From the grocery store, he went to Burke's Lumber Yard and bought four 14-foot planks for the boat. They were 12-inch, "shaky" cypress, for the clear, first-grade stuff was entirely too high.



"Well, it's Andy Ives!" the merchant exclaimed.

"Live out on the bayou?" Mr. Burke asked.

"I've taken up some land out there," Andy told him.

The man studied him closely. He was middle-aged, with keen gray eyes, a genial, honest face, and there was about him an air of solid respectability and honesty. "Why?" he asked curiously.

"I'll tell you," Andy came back, "if you'll tell me why you ask such a question." Somehow, the man's inquisitiveness was not offensive. He really seemed to want to know why.

"Fair enough! Here's why I asked: You don't look like the people who've homesteaded swamp land. You don't talk like them. I just wondered why you went out there."

"To make a farm I didn't have the money to buy," Andy told him. "That's the only reason. I wanted a good farm."

"Well, there's good land out there," the lumberman said, shrugging, "but it'll work you to death before it pays you for your trouble."

"Maybe." Andy paid him for the planks. "Tell you the truth, though, I think we're going to like it."

They drove on to the Bird Hardware, for nails.

"Well, it's Andy Ives!" the merchant exclaimed. "Where have you been keeping yourself?"

"Busy," Andy told him. "You've a good memory for strangers."

The Hallecks Make A Kind Offer

"Some I remember easily. The bayou's about to go on a spree, I hear. What'll it do to you?"

"I wouldn't be able to guess," Andy replied. "Just hoping for the best. I want some nails. Mix 6's and 8's, about four pounds."

"Hey, Sam," Mr. Bird called to his clerk, who was opening stock in the rear of the store. "Come fix up these nails. Ives, come back to my office for a moment."

Andy followed him back to the littered cubicle with desk and safe piled high with invoices and old ledgers. Mr. Bird's manner foretold something of importance.

"This is between us, Ives," he said, "but you'd better do some fencing with good hog wire. I offered you credit back in late fall, when you first came down here. It still stands good."

"Thanks, but what makes you say it like that? You said I'd 'better,' and you said 'good' hog wire."

"You had some trouble with Sig Flanagan during deer season," Mr. Bird told him. "He doesn't like you a lot. He's filling those woods out there with hogs this spring, and they'll make trouble. A good fence will probably save you a lot of misery."

"My place isn't a hog range," Andy said. "It'll be up to Flanagan to keep his hogs off my land."

"I'd hate to see you be hardheaded, Ives," Mr. Bird said in a friendly, interested way. "Take my advice and do some good fencing. Sig Flanagan would like nothing better than a chance to have trouble with you."

"Well, if he feels like that, he'll find the chance one way or another. I intend to fence my farm when I can afford it, Mr. Bird, but right now, my prospects are too uncertain to go in debt for wire to keep out hogs that have no business on my land."

"Your logic is good," Mr. Bird declared. "Your reasoning is very poor. Please don't think I'm trying to run your business or to sell you hog wire. There are a few of us here in Newcastle who feel for you people out there—you modern pioneers! Mr. Burke, at the lumberyard, is one of those who have your best interest at heart. There are others."

Andy thanked him and he and Dave left with the nails. When they crossed the bayou on the return trip, the water was a little higher, striking the bottom edge of the bridge stringer on their left and boiling white as it curled under. There was no drift breaker to ward off floating logs and brush, and the bridge was at the mercy of whatever the current swept down the bayou.

Andy and Dave breathed relief as the wagon rolled off the oak planks at the home end of the bridge and crunched onto the gravel. The drainage ditch on each side of the road was nearly filled with bayou water. The mules trotted along briskly, as if they too were eager to be back home.

At the house, they learned that Bigelow Halleck had been there.

"Did he come for his cow, to save us the trouble of seeing after her during the water?" Andy asked.

"Well," Kate told him, "for one thing, he asked us to move in with them until the flood's over. He said they've room and that their house is on a rise that's never flooded."

"Now, that's nice of him," Andy said gladly. "You and Hope and Granny might enjoy being over there. You said, 'For one thing.' What else did he come for?"

Kate's face was grim. "Word has reached the game warden that Bigelow Halleck shot a wild gobbler for our Christmas dinner."

Andy jerked. "Of all things! Did Sam Bragg come to him about it?"

"He said Mr. Bragg mentioned the report to him yesterday, while he was in town. Of course, Big isn't worried about the warden, for there's no proof that he shot a turkey. What gets him is the question of who could have started such a thing."

"Well, it gets me too," Andy drawled. "Who could have, and why?"

A Malicious Tongue Gets Out-of-Bounds

Kate told him then of Mrs. Webster's prying on Christmas Day morning, and of her own stubborn refusal to alleviate the woman's curiosity. "She hasn't been here since then, either," Kate reminded him. "Hell hath no fury like a nosey woman scorned!" she paraphrased.

"I'll just be dad-blamed!" Andy said slowly. "She doesn't like Big. He was here that morning. She put two and two together and got what she wanted to get!"

That summed it up very well. It was not something to worry about in so far as the game laws were concerned, for there would be no way to prove the report. But there were two unpleasant facets to the matter: It showed that Birdie Webster, in spite of her surface meekness, was capable of malicious gossip; and it was one more black mark against the homesteaders, whom the members of the courthouse ring and their camp followers accused of every game and fish violation in the book—and a good many out of it.

Mr. Eliot and Mr. Flipp arrived late that afternoon and set to work building the boat. Mr. Eliot's round, neatly fringed head was full of figures and angles, and he tossed such terms as "rake" and "flare" and "keel" about with complacent abandon. Mr. Flipp, who had built a number of simple, flat-bottomed, to-the-purpose craft, proceeded with the task, loftily ignoring the old gentleman. Once he said to Andy, on the sly, "Ain't it awful to have a brain so big it gits in the way of the hands?"

It was Mr. Flipp's view that if the weather remained clear the bayou would scarcely more than get within sight of the Ives house. The boat was just a precaution, in case another big rain came. And by the afternoon of the next day they had built and caulked the boat, driving oakum tightly into the main seam with hammer and a putty knife.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Our drains are stopped up very often in spite of the fact that we have had the pipes cleared by a tree-rooter machine. I am of the opinion that it is a clogged vent and not tree roots in the pipes. Can you give me any advice?

ANSWER: It is possible that the pitch of the horizontal soil pipe is insufficient, so that grease and other sediment matter congeals and closes up the line and retards the flow of waste matter to the sewer. Re-laying of the pipe is one solution, if that is the case. I doubt if a clogged vent would cause the condition. The other solution to such a problem is to install a grease trap in the line from the kitchen sink and clean it out periodically.

Home Accident Deaths Number 35,000 in 1948

CHICAGO.—Home is where the heart is—and where the heart of the accident problem is, too.

There were 35,000 home accident deaths in 1948—which makes the home America's No. 1 accidental killer.

Falls were the greatest cause of home deaths last year, resulting in 18,200 fatalities. Burns, scalds and explosions came next, with a total of 6,000 deaths. Mechanical suffocation caused 1,800 deaths, to rank third in 1948.

Special studies show that more than 25 per cent of fatal home accidents occur in the bedroom. The yard and kitchen are the next most hazardous locations at home, causing about 12 and 10 per cent of the deaths respectively.

U.S. Motorists Learn to Drive More Slowly

CHICAGO.—American motorists are learning to drive more safely, according to the 1949 edition of the National Safety Council's statistical yearbook, "Accident Facts."

The 1948 traffic volume was the greatest in the nation's history—8 per cent greater than 1947. Yet the mileage death rate—deaths per 100,000,000 vehicle miles—was the lowest in the nation's history. The 8.0 rate was 30 per cent lower than the average rate of 11.5 through World War II. If the higher rate had prevailed last year, 14,000 more lives would have been lost.

Refuge Open to Hunting

A portion of Mud Lake National Wildlife Reguge, located 12 miles east of Holt, will be open to the hunting of deer by bow and arrow during the regular State archery season, Oct. 16-31 inclusive.

All individuals wishing to hunt on the open area must possess a regular State license, and must comply with all State laws, and Federal regulations applying to this special season.

All hunters must first report to the headquarters office of the Mud Lake Refuge before hunting on refuge lands. Maps and copies of special regulations will be available at the office, and special instructions will be given so that there will be no misunderstanding as to boundaries, boundary marking and refuge regulations. A special Federal permit will be issued, without charge, at the refuge office.

"LAND O'LAKES Helps Me Give Farmers a Fair Return"

"Here's the way it works. Top quality butter brings the biggest demand and the best price. LAND O'LAKES' laboratory and engineering services help us to keep quality high, so there's always a good, profitable market for what we produce. Besides, LAND O'LAKES' marketing service ends our market worries and lets us concentrate on quality. So our farmer-owners get better prices for their milk and cream, a more stable market, and absolutely fair treatment."

Marketing your dairy products through LAND O'LAKES will give you these same cooperative selling advantages. Ask us about it.

the AMERICAN WAY...

Minnesota, with its marvelous fall days, offers one of America's greatest outdoor pastimes — duck hunting. And after spending an exciting day at the "pass" — you return to your cabin, and as you talk over the highlights of the shoot . . . it's "The American Way" to enjoy a glass of sparkling, refreshing Minnesota-brewed beer.

For beer is the kind of beverage Americans like. It belongs . . . to pleasant living, to good fellowship, to sensible moderation. And our right to enjoy it, this too, belongs . . to our own American heritage of personal freedom.

Beer belongs...... enjoy it

Cooling Equipment in Winter

Proper cooling procedure for milk and cream are important 365 days of the year, and farmers should not discontinue using cooling equipment now because warm summer and fall days are gone and colder weather setting in.

This warning was given by B. M. Zakrisson, chief chemist of Land O'Lakes Creameries, who pointed to the dangers of both of too slow cooling by air and of freezing of milk or cream.

He said that cooling is not as rapid by air as it is in water, and that it may send the bacteria count up, increase acidity, develop off-flavors and sourness. The result, he pointed out, will be a second grade product.

"Farmers must be careful to prevent milk and cream from freezing also" he said. "If the fluid freezes it is impossible to get a representative sample of butterfat from the can or to get accurate weights.

"Frozen cream also affects the body of the butter, giving it a lower score which means that it will be worth less on the market." For these reasons, he said farmers profit by using regular cooling equipment throughout the year.

Tallow to Cuba

United States sales of inedible tallow to Cuba in 1948 amounted to 12,337,000 pounds, or 18 per cent of the total exports of this commodity and a larger quantity than was sold to any other country in the world, according to the United States department of commerce. However, the sales to Cuba were 43 per cent under those in 1947, the decline paralleling the sharp decrease in the basic quota given to the sugar industry in Cuba in this country's sugar imports.

Nasturtium Leaves

Here is an interesting bit of information for the housewife who would like to have something different to put into her husband's lunch pail. Nasturtium leaves make very tasty sandwich fillings, and the green seed pods may be pickled and eaten as a substitute for capers.

Breeding Associations

Dairy farmers who own several hundred cows will find it economically practical to form an artificial breeding association and have their cows bred to proven bulls by artificial insemination but the cost of such service is too high for one farmer unless he owns a large number of cows.

Midget States

Mother Europe has seven midget sons: Luxembourg (999 square miles), Trieste (275), Andorra (191), Liechtenstein (61), San Marino (38), Monaco (½), and Vatican City (1/6). The state of Delaware could swallow the entire lot, says the National Geographic society.

Oyster Beds

Although oysters grow in the waters of almost every coastal state, about 90 per cent come from the East coast and Gulf of Mexico where the large eastern oyster (ostrea virginica) is native.

Coccidiosis Death Rate

Livestock health authorities estimate that cecal coccidiosis causes the death of between 12 and 20 per cent of all chicks hatched in the United States.

"School's Out"

Children of The Netherlands have it pretty slick. Whenever the ice on the canals is strong enough, a holiday is declared, school is dismissed, and everyone goes skating.

Mirror on the Wall

Quality of a mirror may be checked quickly by noting the correctness of its reflection. A good mirror, made with polished plate glass, has true reflections.

Fruit Mixture

When fresh pears are combined in a fruit mixture that's to stand for any length of time, it's a good idea to include some kind of acid fruit to prevent discoloration.

Poultry Water

The egg is composed of about two-thirds water, so the hen must consume large amounts of water to maintain high egg production.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Nourse Raps Deficit Spending; Decontrol Fails to Boost Rent; Military Budget Tops 15 Billion

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

U.S. SPENDING:

Deficit System Hit

It seemed an obvious conclusion that the President's council of economic advisers was having little effect in influencing government officials to insist upon a real effort by the administration to put its financial house in order.

ANY such conclusion would have been bolstered by the fact that Dr. Edward G. Nourse, chairman of the council, was quitting that body. In an address before the national retail farm equipment association, Dr. Nourse hit hard at federal deficit spending and charged that the government is "slipping back into deficits as a way of life."

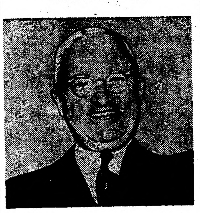
Instead of deficit financing, he said, the government should be "putting its fiscal house in order and husbanding reserves to support the economy if less prosperous times overtake us."

According to reports, Dr. Nourse had informed President Truman that he was going to leave the government, although there was no word as to whether the President had accepted or would accept the resignation.

WELL-PLACED official circles were said to believe that Nourse's decision to leave the advisers council was because of his belief that he had failed in what he regarded was a fight to keep the council on a strict professional plane of fact-finding and advice-giving, divorced from political issues.

In his address, Nourse was critical of elements among labor, agriculture and management, chiding farmers for "demanding stimulative prices," labor for demanding shorter hours in the face of the need for increased production.

Record's In



President Harry S. Truman, with congress finally in adjournment, would have to go to the people with the record of that congress in the fight for Democratic seats in the 1950 elections. Little of his program was enacted, but there was little doubt he would defend the congress to the end.

RENTS:

Keep Level

A rather surprising thing had happened. A survey showed that lifting of rent control in more than 500 areas had not resulted in wholesale rent increases. Lifting of controls, put into effect in wartime, began last April 1.

TAKEN as a whole, however, rents in key decontrolled areas did go up a little, but the hike was not as severe as most observers had predicted.

The survey disclosed that landlord reaction to decontrol was spotty. One major factor in the over-all rent picture was said to be the number of vacancies available —a factor which might, after all, have considerable restraining effect on any appreciable over-all rent increase. Some landlords raised rents, but had to cut them again when tenants moved out. Also some landlords were still bound by leases issued in the period before decontrol.

According to the survey, increases were scattered, rather than general, in most places.

THUS THE PICTURE of the rent situation generally is clouded by the factors enumerated, factors which may of themselves have enough restraint value to hold down rent hike, as well as a disinclination of landlords to raise rentals to levels most Americans expected.

Continuing strikes, loss of income, more accessibility of housing sites may all combine to keep any general and extensive rent increases from being made in the near future.

MILITARY:

15.5 Billions

If war comes, America intends to be ready. Demonstrating that fact, congress finally got together on a record peace-time military appropriations bill totaling approximately 15.5 billion dollars, including funds to build the air force up to 58 groups.

BREAKING a month-long deadlock and spurred, no doubt, by reports that Russia has the atomic bomb, house and senate hurried through the details of the final measure which went to President Truman for approval.

In this action, the senate finally bowed to house insistence on giving the air force some 10 groups and 740 million dollars more than President Truman had requested for it.

CONCERN over the possibility of enemy atomic attack was indicated when congress also appropriated 50 million dollars to start construction of a vast radar screen designed to warn the United States of any enemy air attack.

BIG DAY:

Break for Kids

Underprivileged children in more than 3,000 U. S. and Canadian communities will receive assistance from a far-reaching program of youth welfare announced by Kiwanis International and The National Kids' Day Foundation, Inc.

J. Hugh Jackson, Stanford, Calif., president of Kiwanis International, in announcing the cooperative effort, said "the problems of underprivileged children are the problems of the entire nation but their solution depends upon local action. There are more than 3,000 Kiwanis clubs which are geared for participation in the program."

FOCAL POINT of the campaign will be the observance of an annual "National Kids Day," the first to be held on Saturday, November 19, when each community will be asked to enlist the support of its citizens in meeting the problems of local youth.

The Kiwanis president emphasized that National Kids' Day will not be celebrated as a holiday or used as a gift-giving occasion. "It is our intention to use the observance of this day as a means of rallying the forces of each community toward solving local juvenile problems," he continued. "By this means, we hope to raise additional funds to carry on a year-round program of youth activity in cities and towns in the U. S. and Canada. Money raised in each community will be spent in the same community for the benefit of children."

CHARLES PETTIJOHN, executive secretary of The National Kids' Day Foundation, Hollywood, Calif., said his organization was formed last year to call national attention to the right of underprivileged youth to enjoy some of the benefits normally accruing to boys and girls in more fortunate circumstances. The Foundation also seeks to attract attention to the accomplishments of youth and to stimulate additional interest in the problems of youth.

DEFENSE:

A Speedup

The United States was moving swiftly to meet the threat of Soviet possession of the atomic bomb. President Truman and the atomic energy commission had ordered a 30 million dollar expansion of atom bomb facilities at Oak Ridge, Tenn., and Hanford, Wash.

THUS THE RACE to see whether the U. S. or Soviet Russia could produce the most bombs seemed to be on, and with it went any immediate hope, at least, for any international control of atomic energy. The extent of the U. S. effort in the race was seen when authoritative quarters announced that the new atomic-plant-construction program ultimately would cost 300 million dollars.

Chairman McMahon (D., Conn.) of the congressional atomic energy committee, called the project a "major expansion effort." McMahon would not say that the action stemmed from Russian progress with atomic fission, but there was a certain evidence of haste inasmuch as White House clearance for the project came just six days after President Truman announced the atomic explosion in Russia.

MIDDLE COURSE

India Would Fight if Liberty Threatened

India will steer a middle course, clear of entanglements in the cold war, but when "man's liberty or peace" is endangered, then India will fight.

That was the declaration of India's prime minister Jawaharlal Nehru in a foreign policy speech in New York a few days after his arrival in the United States.

He called upon the world to talk less of war and to think more of peace and how to attain it, and admonished both east and west that: "The very process of marshaling of the world into two hostile camps precipitates the conflict which it is sought to avoid.

The Indian statesman's views were given in an address marking ceremonies in which Columbia university made him an LLD.

Meticulous

Nobody ever imagined that the serious-minded and somber-faced editor of dictionaries would flirt, least of all his wife. But one day she found him kissing the maid—and exclaimed:

"Why, John, I'm surprised!"

He retorted:

"Not you, my dear—I am surprised; you are astonished."

That Nagging Backache
May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, including Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, face grave problems in their new home in the wilderness. They are disliked by the lawmakers as being intruders. With the help of neighbors, Andy and Dave manage to get the worst of the land clearing over. They spend a quiet first Christmas but the following days bring heavy rains and a possible flood is in view. Mr. Bird, town businessman, warns Andy that Sig Flanagan, a hunter with whom Andy has had trouble, plans to bring his hogs to feed in the swampland with the deliberate intention of ruining Andy's crops. Eliot and Flipp, two of Andy's neighbors, help him make a boat in case it is needed.

CHAPTER XIX

Then, to make it a complete, maneuverable job, Mr. Flipp, using a drawing knife, turned out a neat pair of paddles.

Dave and Mr. Flipp walked to the bayou bridge that Andy had crossed on the afternoon during deer season, and examined the marker that Mr. Flipp had set up. The bridge was still above water, but another foot of rise would send the current racing across it, and would perhaps sweep it away, for it was an old and rather flimsy affair.

"It riz a foot today," Mr. Flipp said, straightening up from his examination of the rough gauge. "Riz two foot yestiddy in the same length of time. That's good."

"How long will it keep rising?" Dave asked.

"Mebbe a couple of days, but if it's slowin' this fast it won't go so much higher—less'n we git some more rain."

"Will it take a big rain to put it out all over the swamp?"

"Well, a heavy dew won't do it, but a rain half as big as the one we've just had will be tough on ever'thing that can't fly or climb a tree!"

"What about Deefy?" Dave inquired. "Where does he go when the water gets up? It must be bad in the low swamp where he is."

"I've heerd," Mr. Flipp told him, "that they's a ol' Indian mound off yonder in that swamp, an' folks thinks Deefy gits on that durin' high water."

"You haven't been down in there? You've lived out here all this time and haven't been down in the swamp?"

Mr. Flipp gazed sadly upon the boy. "I never lost a thing in that swamp, an' they ain't anything down there I'd expec' to find!"

"You're not afraid of Deefy, are you?"

"Well, I ain't afeerd of him. If he put at me, I could stop him right quick with my rifle, but they wouldn't be no use in hurtin' the pore critter. Anyway, that's his woods down there."

Andy was happy over the news that the bayou's rate of rise was dropping off. It should be on a "stand" in a few days. Then it would start falling, and he and Dave could pitch into the work awaiting them. He went to bed that night early, for in the morning he and Dave would return to their clearing. It was so warm that he was comfortable with no more cover than just the sheet. The grating symphony of a million tiny frogs rose and fell. A mosquito whined petulantly near Andy's nose.

He was awakened by the rolling of thunder. He sat up in bed and looked out of the window.

"Sounds like rain coming," Kate said.

"May have a shower," Andy told her. "Go on back to sleep." And he pulled the shade down to soften the lightning's glare.

Speculation on Escaping the Flood

The storm struck with a rush of wind that shook the house. Huge drops, racing vanguard of the downpour, played a swift rataplan on the south wall and on that side of the roof. Then came the dull roar of the rain sweeping up the woods. The frogs were quiet, and there was no sound left except that of the storm. The rain struck the house with battering force.

Andy and Kate lay in the bed and thought their own thoughts. Andy got up after a time and placed vessels under the leaks, then came back to bed. By now, the wind had passed on, and there was little lightning, but the rain continued in a steady downpour that would have been soothing in Harbisonville. But there was no peace here! This was the rest of the overflow that he had dreaded! This was the end of suspense.

"We won't go to the Hallecks'" Kate said abruptly. "It'll be better to take our chances in the refugee camp."

By dawn the rain had slackened a little, but not enough to offer any hope. A dreadful lot of water had already fallen, and if the cloud broke now things would be bad enough. But the cloud gave no promise of breaking. The rain held on into the morning.

Dave struck out through the woods to see Mr. Flipp and ask advice, but he met the lean woodsman before he had gone halfway.

"I'm on my way to yore house now," Mr. Flipp told him. "Looks like you all better git the mules an' the cow out of here. May have some water."

"How fast is the bayou rising?" Dave inquired. "Have you looked at your marker this morning?"

"I don't need to. Lookin' at my gauge now is 'bout like watchin' a blaze to see if the fire's burnin'."

"What are you and Mr. Eliot going to do?"

"Well, we got our little plunder packed up, an' our skiff's ready whenever we need it. We'll stick aroun' till the whole swamp's under, an' then row out to the highway."

"There goes a deer!" Dave cried, pointing to the south. "It's heading for Deefy's part of the swamp."

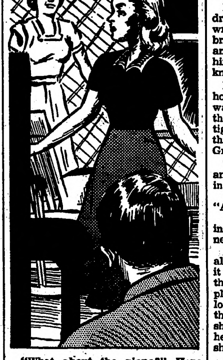
Mr. Flipp nodded. "The wild things know where high ground is. If they's a Indian mound in the low swamp, it'll be as thick with runnin', crawlin' things as Mount Arreroot was when ol' Noah landed!"

"You mean Mount Ararat, don't you?"

"That's exactly whut I called it," Mr. Flipp said gently.

In their short walk to the house they saw rabbits and possums, two more deer, wood rats, fox squirrels, and three coons racing along. All were headed southward. Instinct was driving them toward a point of safety.

"It's like this all through the woods," Dave marveled. "They know there's going to be a flood. They're so bothered by it that they aren't very scared of us."



"What about the piano?" Hope asked. "Will we have to leave it here to get ruined?"

"You watch the wild things," Mr. Flipp advised. "At first you're sorry fer 'em; then, the more you see how they take care of theyselfs an' how smart they are, the more you wonder if they ain't feelin' sorry fer us!"

"What about the hogs that range these woods?" Dave asked. "Will they get out of the way of the water?"

"Sure, they've took off already. I heerd 'em one night not long ago, makin' their way across the bayou. They've foun' high groun' long 'fore now. Hawgs is sharp peckerwoods!"

It was Mr. Flipp's firm opinion that the womenfolk should leave at once. Andy and Dave could follow. "This is the fu'thest back house in the swamp with women livin' in it," he said. "All the rest of 'em are nearer the highway, an' some of the homesteaders live on the other side of the bayou, an' they can git out easy."

"You'd advise us to run off and leave Andy and Dave?" Granny asked before Kate could put the same question.

"That's whut I had in mind, ma'am. You kin do as you please, course."

Women Pack Up And Leave Home

"I understand that." There was an edge to her voice. She looked at Kate. "You decide it," she suggested.

"I think Mr. Flipp is right," Andy put in. "When Dave and I get everything straight, we'll join you. Pack up, Kate, and let's get started."

"What about the piano?" Hope asked. "Will we have to leave it here to get ruined?"

"The water won't git up in the house," Mr. Flipp said. "If it even gits up under the house, it'll be awful high. But we'll set the pianner on blocks, just to make sure. You see, when the bayou goes out of its banks, it rises a heap slower, for there's so much flat land to be covered. It spreads out."

"This may be a lot of trouble for nothing," Granny said. "If the water won't get into the house, then we surely won't drown."

"What if you needed a doctor?" Mr. Flipp asked. "You couldn't git one out here!"

"I haven't had a doctor in forty years!"

"An' it'll be nasty with water all over ever'thing, an' ever'body packed up in the house day after day. It's easy to ketch cold. The drinkin' water might git infested—"

"Infected?" Granny asked.

"Yes, ma'am. I said that. 'Scuse me," he said sarcastically, "if I use too many big words."

"You don't," Granny told him. "Now, see here, Mr. Flipp, we appreciate your help and interest, but we're women who like to stick by our men. I told Kate to decide it, but I'm afraid you're going to outtalk her, so I—"

"This is somethin' fer menfolks to decide," Absalom Flipp interrupted. "I don't like to speak sharp to a lady, ma'am, but in the Bible it says that a man don't have to put up with a froward woman, an'—"

"Where does the Bible say such a thing?"

"Look it up," Mr. Flipp suggested. "It means a woman that talks back to a man. Besides, yore boat won't carry all five of you."

"Let's not argue," Kate broke in. "Let's pack our suitcases and go." She turned to Andy. "You and Dave will come as soon as you have everything safely scaffolded and hung up, won't you?"

He nodded. "I promise you that."

It was a thing to go at quickly, with little talk. Kate felt that she was retreating, but in the face of a vastly superior enemy; and it was a case of "running away, to return and fight another day."

It was still raining when they drove away, the three women well wrapped and huddled under an umbrella, Andy and Dave in slickers and boots. The Jersey was tied behind the wagon, her rope securely knotted on the endgate rod.

Kate looked back at the little house that had come to be home. It was hardly more than a shack, but the world revolved about it now. A tight, warm lump crowded her throat, but she refused to cry. Granny would scold her.

Then she heard a light sniffling and saw that her mother was crying softly.

"Now, Granny!" Hope teased. "Aren't you ashamed?"

"Of what?" the old woman asked in a tremulous voice. "For goodness' sake, of what?"

In the low stretch, the water was almost belly-deep to the mules, and it threatened to come up through the wagon bed in one deep, soft place. The Jersey held back, bellowed a choking blast that caused the riders to wheel as one; but when she felt herself being dragged and her breath cut off by the tight rope, she came on docilely enough.

They reached the gravel. After a half mile of this, they began crossing shallow currents of muddy water that had eased into the road from the drainage ditches along the shoulders. And in places they were traveling along a streak of yellow-red gravel running between two broad expanses of water.

They ferried the bayou on a barge held by a heavy wire cable for the bridge had been swept away early that morning. Dave and Andy tried to be casual about it, but they had little luck in deceiving the frightened women.

It was a wonderful thing to be on land again!

At the concrete highway, Andy staked out the Jersey. He would pick her up again on his way back, and leave her with the mules at the Halleck place. He was set against risking Sig Flanagan's care.

Getting Located Proves a Problem

Kate wondered if Big would want to keep the mules. "Maybe he has enough of his own things to see after," she offered.

"If he wanted to keep three women," Andy said dryly, "in the house and underfoot, surely he won't mind letting two extra mules stay in his barn lot!"

They drove on to town, and to the refugee camp, where tents were being set up. It was a busy place. Groups of people stood about in the rain, disconsolate, with their assorted possessions piled about them. They were weary, wet, the men muddy and unshaven, a shabby cross section of the swamp-angel population.

"There's the sheriff," Andy said. "Maybe he'll tell us how to get located." And he struck out for the tall officer whom he had last seen on the day of his sharp words with Sig Flanagan.

"Hey, Mr. Martin," he called. "Where do we go—?"

The sheriff waved. "Busy now. We're getting things set up as fast as possible. You'll have to wait a while." And he went on, walking fast. There was no sign that he had recognized Andy.

Andy turned to rejoin Dave and the women.

"We'll find out where to go," Kate said. "You and Dave get started back."

"Lord, I hate to leave you all standing here in the rain like this!" Andy said miserably. "But if Dave and I are going by Hallecks' and then home, we ought to get started."

"Hi, ever'body," a voice said behind them. "Looks like quite a gyetherin' here, don't it?"

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: I was recently given two antique glass cream pitchers, but they have been washed in soap and water so much much that the designs in the glass are filled with a soap crust. I have failed to remove this after repeated trials. Can you give me any help?

ANSWER: I believe the deposit is more from hard water than soap, although this has probably stuck to the glass also. If the pitchers are of cut glass of some kind without any painted designs, the crust should soften by soaking with a non-flamable cleaning fluid, giving it plenty of time to act. Kerosene may also help. A stiff brush would be convenient to work with.

QUESTION: We purchased a farm and are remodeling the small Colonial house on it, in which we now live. We added an underground garage and expect to use the top for a porch. It is now covered with maple floor boards, but a friend advises against it, saying the cement floor would crack later. It is 10x26 ft. and we shall not build a roof over it for a year or two. What is your opinion?

ANSWER: I agree with your friend; I do not advise using cement over the maple boards, for the job almost certainly would be unsatisfactory. You would find it more practical to cover the boards with a top-quality roofing canvas, and then paint it with a good-quality deck paint. The canvas should be properly laid by someone who understands the work.

Good Laundering Keeps Bedding Fresh and Fragrant

NOTHING makes sleep more enjoyable than clean sheets and pillow cases, fluffy clean blankets and fragrant bed spreads, Georgia Leffingwell points out in nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer.

Listing home laundering methods that will insure fresh and fragrant bedding, she writes:

"Manufacturer's instructions give a washing machine's capacity. Be sure there's plenty of suds when washing a quilt, blanket or spread. Four to six sheets are a normal load, but a mixture of sheets and pillow cases gives better circulation and cleaner bedding."

Sheets and pillow cases, she adds, should be washed in water about 130 degrees F., with a rich, two inch suds. Let wash from 5 to 15 minutes, depending on how soiled the bedding is. Then give them a clear-rinse and follow with a cool rinse.

Pinning on the clothesline from the corners or edges is an invitation to tearing, so fold sheets or pillowcases from hem to hem with corners even. Hang a third to half over the line.

"Blankets and spreads need a bit more careful handling," she writes in the magazine read by 1,300,000 farm families. "Use lukewarm water and rich suds. "Spots may be rubbed with two well-soaped fingers and blanket binding with a soft brush. Give them three rinses to remove every bit of soap. Keep the wringer loose.

"Dry the blankets or rayon colored spreads in the shade or on a line indoors away from direct heat or sunlight. Reverse them occasionally as they stop dripping to prevent sagging. Blot moisture with a towel as it collects. When dry, brush both sides of blanket with clean brush to bring up nap. Press the binding with warm iron."

Fall Pasture Renovation Builds Meat and Beef Producing Power, Gives More High Value Feed

Adding Lime and Fertilizer Helps Build Better Legume-Grass Yields.

CHICAGO—Now is the time to start renovating "punch drunk" pastures to build up their milk and beef producing power.

Killing out the old blue grass and growing alfalfa-ladino-brome grass in its place doubled yields of forage and increased the protein harvest fourfold in Wisconsin tests. The old blue grass yielded 1,800 pounds of forage per acre, representing about 200 pounds of protein. The new alfalfa-ladino-brome grass seeding yielded close to 2 tons. Its protein content averaged about 800 pounds per acre. To get these better grasses and legumes, lime and fertilizers carrying phosphate and potash were needed to sweeten the soil and build its mineral nutrient content.

Thorough fall working will completely kill the old blue grass so that you can move in next spring and seed the higher producing legumes and grasses. Soil tests this fall will give you a line on the lime and fertilizer needs for the new seeding. If you leave the field rough and cloddy this fall, there is no danger of soil loss during winter and spring even on the steepest slopes.

1. Apply lime as it is shown to be needed by soil tests.
2. On heavy sod criss-cross the field with a weighted single disc to cut the sod into chunks. Then dig the field twice with a field cultivator. The second time work on the contour. Just before freezing dig the field again to open the roots of the sod to freezing during winter and leave it rough to hold the winter and spring rains.
3. In early spring work the field once with a field cultivator and spike tooth harrow in tandem. Then with a grain drill seed the nurse crop and put on your fertilizer.
4. Put on your legume seed with a cultipacker seeder. This is important for a firm seed bed and good coverage of legume seed makes a startling difference in the catch that you get.

Deer Hunting Opens Saturday

Zone 1, the northern zone of the state will open for a period of five days for deer hunting from sunrise to sunset, Nov. 12 to 16 inclusive. The limit is one deer of either sex. This zone also includes all those portions of Mud Lake National Wildlife Refuge lying easterly of the CCC Camp road and south of county road "E", subject to checking out daily and subject to closing after 600 deer have been taken.

No person shall discharge any firearm upon, over, or across any improved public highway at any big game animal, or while such is within its limits of the right-of-way of any public highway. No deer hunting with firearms within 500 yards of any building on a game refuge or state park. Bows must have at least 40 pounds pull at full draw Deer killed or wounded in any game refuge or state park must be reported on leaving to game warden or refuge patrolman, with special checking in Mud Lake National Wildlife Refuge. Observe local regulations in game refuges, state parks and public hunting grounds.

November 14 will be the last day on which hunters may purchase licenses to hunt big game, according to a ruling issued today by the attorney general's office.

The law provides that licenses cannot be purchased after the third day of the season.

Frank D. Blair warned hunters that the law requiring caps 100% solid red and jackets at least three-fourths solid red will be in effect this year. Red plaids are not acceptable, as the clothing must be solid red, crimson or scarlet.

If any of you deer hunters have any ideas about bringing home a Christmas Tree you'd better have the signed consent of the landowner!

Under a recent law, written consent of the land owner on a special form must be received before anyone can take a Christmas Tree from another's property

Trees being transported without written consent are subject to confiscation and the possessor liable to prosecution for misdemeanor, which may cost up to $100.

Balanced Soil Plan Gives Top Yields at Low Production Cost

COLUMBIA, MO.—A five-point program to "balance the soil's needs" and obtain maximum crop yields per acre at low production costs, was outlined by O. T. Coleman, Missouri University extension soils specialist.

Here are the steps Coleman suggests:

1. Provide plenty of plant food in available form for the crops you are growing. Crops cannot grow without nutrients.
2. Have your soil tested to determine whether the plant food supply is in balance. Growing crops need a balanced ration the same as do people and livestock.
3. Get the soil in condition so that crops can use the plant foods. This means a turnover of organic matter. You can add organic matter and improve soil tilth, drainage and aeration by growing well-fertilized deep-rooted legumes.
4. Keep water, plant nutrients and topsoil at home by conservation methods. Where needed, these may include terracing and contouring to reduce runoff and erosion losses.
5. Follow a well-balanced cropping system. Deep-rooted legumes for pasture and green manure crops need to be rotated regularly with grains. Livestock is a "must" to properly handle pasture and roughage crops in such a crop-balancing program. Tests have shown that where a crop is pastured off, about 75 per cent of the organic matter is returned to the soil. This is true of both legume and non-legume crops.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, including Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, face grave problems in their new home in the wilderness. The two men, with the help of neighbors, clear most of the land but they no sooner finish than the heavy rains begin and floods seem a likely possibility. In town, Andy is told that Sig Flanagan, a hunter with whom he has already had trouble, plans to buy hogs to feed in the swampland with the idea that they will ruin Andy's crops. When the water continues higher, Kate, Hope and Granny leave for a refugee camp to escape being trapped. Dave and Andy remain behind to get things in order, before joining the women folk at the camp.

CHAPTER XX

They turned and saw Hank Butler. He was carrying his guitar in a canvas case beneath his slicker. He was looking at Hope.

At the Halleck place Andy explained why the women had gone to the refugee camp: Kate had feared it would be an imposition to stay with the Hallecks. This was the best way to put it.

"Why, we'd have been glad to have them," Mrs. Halleck said. She was a small, blond woman, who walked with a limp. It was hard to think she had borne a son of Big's dimensions, except that they had similar eyes and coloring and the same sensitiveness about the mouth. "They should've come right on here. Big, you go to the camp tomorrow and persuade them."

"It would have been nice to have 'em," he said. "You and Dave come in, Mr. Ives."

"Thanks. We'll have to get along home before dark. Got some wading to do. Look, Big, I want to leave my mules and wagon here. Sig Flanagan is in charge of refugee stock, and we don't get along very well, so—"

"Why, sure, man! Glad to keep the mules. Let's unhitch and turn 'em in the lot. I wouldn't want Sig Flanagan seeing after my—"

"Understand, I want to pay you for feeding them," Andy said.

"We'll settle that later."

When they reached home, they found Mr. Flipp sitting on the doorstep. "I was waitin' here fer you," he said. "Jest wanted to be shore you got home."

"Come in and eat with us," Andy invited. "We haven't had supper yet."

"I'll set," Mr. Flipp told him, "but I've et."

Even Mr. Flipp's company, comforting as it might be, did little to dispel the lonesomeness in the house with Kate and Hope and Granny gone. As Andy and Dave sat down to supper, Andy said abruptly:

"Mr. Flipp, why any man would live alone the way you do, I can't see! I couldn't do it."

"Could if you was used to it," Mr. Flipp told him. "A man can git used to havin' a woman or doin' without her." He grinned as if it hurt and winked at Dave. "When I was yore age, I had me a gal."

"No!" Dave said. "Honest?"

"Naw, but I figgered she was fer a long time. Then I foun' out diff'nt."

"She was dishonest? I didn't mean that. I meant—"

"The way it was, she made out like she was plum' foolish 'bout me, an' all the time she was sneakin' mash notes to Arch Hollowell. We was all three in the fifth reader then."

"The fifth reader?"

"We went by readers, 'stead of grades, them days. When I caught her, I shore fixed her up!"

"What did you do?" Dave asked. By now, he was beginning to wonder if Mr. Flipp was pulling his leg. There was a light in the hunter's sad blue eyes.

"I hid a wawst nest in her desk. Boy, you ouhta heard that gal squall when she reached in after her books! Like a pant'er!"

"That was pretty rugged, wasn't it?" Dave asked. "Didn't she get stung awfully?"

"Yeah, an' that's the bad part 'bout it. I felt so mean I went out an' drownded myself."

"You got me there," Dave said sourly. "I thought you were kiddin' me."

"Well, part of it's so," Mr. Flipp said. "They was a gal I liked, an' she did marry Arch Hollowell." He laughed shortly. "Las' time I heerd of Ella Bell an' Arch, they had eight younguns, includin' two sets of twins. Lorda'mighty, s'pose I had me eight little Flipps whuppin' 'roun' my coattail!"

Hope Meets Up With Hank Again

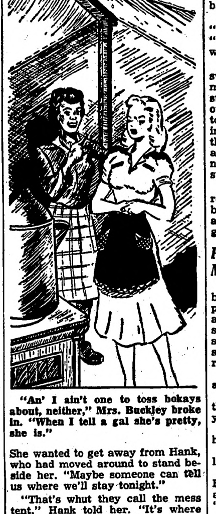
This, then was the early romance of Absalom Flipp, whom neither Dave nor Andy had ever suspected of any interest, in youth or in maturity, in the distaff department. Perhaps there was a deep bitterness in the man, from his ill-fated affair with the prolific Ella Bell; and perhaps to cover that bitterness he had developed a dim view of women.

They set to work and put the piano on blocks that held it about six inches above the floor. They scaffolded up dressers and washstands and chests of drawers, raising them out of danger of standing in water. Mr. Flipp was positive that the level would never reach even the underside of the floor, but Andy wanted to be on the safe side. They hung towels and clothes and quilts across the joists in the unceiled kitchen, so the air could get to them and prevent mildewing. They made the provisions that would be left in the house as nearly airtight as possible, in jars and metal cans. And by bedtime the house was as ready as they could make it for the flood.

In the refugee camp, Kate, Hope, and Granny found themselves under the protective interest of Hank Butler, who assured them that they would have a very enjoyable time during the emergency.

"It's bad, in a way," he said, "but some folks look for'd to high water, so they can come here an' have a picnic. That's what it is to some, a reg'lar picnic."

"Let's go to the big tent over there," Hope said to her mother.



"An' I ain't one to toss bokays about, neither," Mrs. Buckley broke in. "When I tell a gal she's pretty, she is."

She wanted to get away from Hank, who had moved around to stand beside her. "Maybe someone can tell us where we'll stay tonight."

"That's whut they call the mess tent," Hank told her. "It's where ever'body eats, 'ceptin' them that has brung their vittles an' ways to cook them."

"Well, let's do something!" Granny said in disgust. "My feet are getting cold."

"Yonder's the Darnleys," Hank said, "an' the Websters, huddled under that tarpaulin in the back of Harley's truck. Le's go over an' chew the fat with them fer a while."

But Kate had no taste for chewing the fat with Birdie at that dismal moment, so she and Hope and Granny struck out for the big tent.

Loneliness in a Refugee Camp

They ate that night in the mess tent, crowded and jostled by a motley gathering that was enlivened too frequently by playful youngsters who were finding this a huge lark. A generous scattering of infants was present, and six or eight, roughly speaking, managed to cry at the same time. It was somewhat like an old-time camp meeting minus the preacher. And there was even promise that Brother Cowann would soon come, and hold services at least once a day.

Kate came face to face with Birdie Webster during that unpalatable meal. Harley and Oreen were with her. Birdie nodded stiffly and said, "Howdy do, Miz Ives." But Harley made up for his mate's lack of neighborly warmth, rasping out: "Well, if it ain't the Iveses! I was wonderin' where y'all was at. Is ol' Andy here?"

Kate told him where Andy was. She smiled at Oreen and spoke. But Oreen was as cool as her mother, and returned the greeting with a brief "Hi'dy," and a little toss of her head.

The Wallaces and the Buckleys were in the camp. Mrs. Wallace was tall and dark, with the cheekbones and straight black hair of an Indian. She was, to judge from her looks and bearing, as strong as a man. Mrs. Buckley was a very different type—short and slender and freckled, with dry, stiff, reddish hair.

"I've heard tell of the Iveses," she said, "ever since Mr. Buckley holped with the house." She studied Hope's face critically. "He said when he come home the first day, he said, 'They sure have got a pretty gal!' an' when my man comes home sayin' that I git my cur'osity up. You are pretty," she finished.

"Why, thank you," Hope said, flushing a little. "It's nice—"

"An' I ain't one to toss bokays about, neither," Mrs. Buckley broke in. "When I tell a gal she's pretty, she is."

"Now, Ida," Mr. Buckley put in gently, "you're flusterin' Miss Hope. No use in that."

"Maybe I am, an' maybe I'm not." Ida Buckley's chin lifted to a height. "Show me the gal that don't like to be called pretty, even by somebody that don't mean it like I do when I say it. I never tell a gal she's pretty less'n she is." She nodded briskly and looked about her, checking on the impression she had made.

They slept on Army cots that night, along with possibly a hundred other women and children. The building was large and drafty, having been designed originally to house the livestock entries in the Newcastle Fair. Most of the occupants slept cold. Granny awoke with a marked case of sniffles.

"Good bordig, Biziz Ives," she said solemnly. "I ab a sufferig refuchee!"

Kate frowned. "Do you feel as bad as you sound, mother?"

"Dough," Granny answered. "Worse!" Then she added sourly: "Oh, I'll propaply live. Dod't worry."

More people came out of the swamp that day. Rescue crews in motorboats cruised through flooded stretches of the big woods, hunting out those who had stayed at home too long. The Red Cross was moving in to help. It was whispered about that things would be better then, and that the county authorities were not overanxious to make the homesteaders comfortable.

Early that morning Kate was already looking for Andy and Dave, but Granny told her not to be silly and to stop worrying over two grown men.

Hope Sees the Mayor's Daughter

Hank and Oreen were together at breakfast, but when he saw Hope he pushed his way through the mob and reached her side. "I heerd somethin' last night," he whispered, standing so close that Hope could smell the sharp odor of stale cigarettes on his breath.

"What?" she asked, drawing back a little.

He spoke out of the corner of his thin mouth. "That Big Halleck give y'all yore turkey fer Chris'mas!"

"We heard that too," Hope told him. "Oreen's coming after you."

He grinned proudly. "She's a silly li'l gal!"

"Hi'dy," Oreen said tersely to Hope. She caught Hank's hard arm and in a high, petulant tone said, "Come on, Hank."

Later in the morning, Hope saw that the chunky girl was still with him. An admiring group had gathered about the two, and Hank was playing his guitar and singing the sad, sad song about a boy who found his betrothed untrue and promptly sank a cold, cold blade into her black heart. Oreen's air was proudly proprietary, but she did wince now and then and shift from one aching foot to the other. Her black pumps had got wet yesterday, and today they were drying in the sunshine and shrinking. Her feet were not.

They were more comfortable that night, having more cover and another stove in the big building. The wind had died down too, and this helped. Granny's sniffles were no worse.

The next morning Mayor Winslow came out to speak to the refugees and to tell them that as the top dignitary of Newcastle he was delighted to have a small part in making them comfortable, and that the great heart of "our fair city goes out to you distressed people." The mayor's voice roared impressively over the loud-speaker system. He was a big-bodied, spindle-legged man with an aggressive face and a shock of black hair. Having made the refugees feel that they were honoring the town with their presence at its edge, he proceeded, delicately but clearly, to point out the necessity for law and order; and he spoke glowingly of Newcastle's efficient constabulary.

"He's a-warnin' us!" a man back of Hope growled. "We ain't here to bother nobody!"

Hope caught her breath quickly, waited a moment before standing on tiptoe to look at Virgie Winslow. But the view was poor.

The mayor was talking on and on. He dealt at length with the war and the peace and reconversion and labor and agriculture, then topped off this comprehensive orgy of words with the warm assurance that Newcastle stood ready to do its utmost in this time of need, for—and he roared it—"We are all brothers together!"

When he sat down, the crowd applauded temperately.

"And now," said the slim man with nose glasses, who appeared to be in charge of the program, "we are to be honored with a solo by our popular mayor's daughter, Mrs. Stanley Warrenton." He paused, and someone up front began clapping. A few others joined in. "She will sing," he went on with a gracious smile, " 'Indian Love Call.' "

"Ummm!" Hope groaned.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Renews Pledge of Support Of 'Safe Plan' for Atomic Curbs; Attlee Charts British Saving Plan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MAKES BID FOR STEEL PEACE . . . Cyrus Ching (facing camera) director of the U. S. mediation service, is surrounded by newsmen as he arrived from Washington to make another effort for settlement of the paralyzing steel strike. These conferences were described as "exploratory," although Ching later reported that the situation was "not hopeless."

TRUMAN:
Supports A-Curbs

"To assure that atomic energy will be devoted to man's welfare and not to his destruction is a continuing challenge to all nations and all peoples."

In those words, President Truman pledged his support to any safe and effective plans that would outlaw the atomic bomb.

THE PRESIDENT spoke at a ceremony in which the United Nations laid the cornerstone for its permanent headquarters in New York city.

Mr. Truman called the cornerstone rites "an act of faith — our unshakable faith that the United Nations will succeed."

The President declared that control of weapons is essential to a peaceful world and said that "Ever since the first atomic bomb was developed, a major objective of U. S. policy has been a system of international control of atomic energy that would assure effective prohibition of atomic weapons . . and at the same time would promote the peaceful use of atomic energy by all nations."

HE ENDORSED anew the Bernard Baruch control plan which was rejected by Russia.

The chief point of disagreement between western powers and Russia on atomic energy control has been insistence by the West on an effective means of inspection to see that nations would keep their pledges to outlaw the bombs. Russia wouldn't hold still for that proposal.

WORLD FRONT:
Spotty Picture

The world picture was spotty as international developments became increasingly confusted. Washington development intensified the tension between the U. S. and Russia in the cold war, British and U. S. leaders were beginning to split on the issue of recognizing the Chinese Red conquering government, France was hard-pressed to organize its government, a Greco-Tito pact appeared possible and the U. S. closed its consulate at Darien. A look at the overall situation showed that in.

WASHINGTON — The United States in a new crackdown on Russia had obtained an indictment against Amtorg, Russian purchasing agency in the U. S., and six of its officers on charges of failing to register as agents of a foreign power. The maximum penalty for violation of that law would be $10,000 fine and five years imprisonment. The firm itself was liable to a $10,000 fine. Shortly after U. S. attorney general McGrath announced return of the indictment, five of the Russians were arrested by FBI agents in New York. As was expected, Soviet officials vigorously protested the arrests. There had been repeated allegations in congress that Amtorg acts as an espionage agent. Said assistant U. S. attorney Edward R. Rigney: "Diplomatic passports don't constitute a defense for the crime charged here." The indictments did not charge Amtorg with serving as an espionage agency for the Soviets.

LONDON — There was a developing split between Great Britain and the United States on the issue of recognition of the Communist regime in China. Indications were that London would establish full diplomatic relations soon. However, this appeared contingent on whether the Communists would leave the British alone at Hong Kong and promise to respect their rights there. The difference on opinion between the U.S. and Britain on the subject of recognition was not considered as a particularly serious one. It was regarded here as an inevitable reflection of their differing national interests. While the U.S. has been withdrawing from China, the British are still "in" and hope to remain so for obvious economic and financial reasons.

DARIEN — Harassment by Chinese Communists had forced closing of the U.S. consulate there. The American consul and vice-consul from this Russian-controlled city moved to Seoul. The U.S. attaches who had spent 15 months here said Communist policies prevented their relief at the end of a scheduled eight-month tour of duty. At a news conference, the reported Communist obstacles had limited their movements severely. Vice-consul Culver Gleysteen said he was once held four hours by Chinese Communist police and Soviet soldiers who accused him of "signaling out to sea" with the lights of his jeep.

HAWAII — The prolonged strike of dock workers at five of Hawaii's six ports was over at last. The CIO international longshoremen's and warehousemen's union ordered its 2,000 striking stevedores to go back to their jobs. The men struck May 1, demanding a raise of 32 cents in their $1.40 hourly wage. The strike technically ended October 6, but continued, pending settlement of side issues involving working conditions, pay and other issues in outer-island ports.

Norway Reports Progress In Atomic-Energy Study

Norway was getting along rather well with atomic research, according to a report by the council for scientific research.

The report said drilling for uranium in Setesdal valley had been successful, and underground operations had started with a crew of 30.

The country's first atomic pile is being built near Oslo, and three universities have received equipment for atomic research.

ENGLAND:
More Austerity

In a drastic effort to rescue Great Britain from its financial morass, Prime Minister Clement Attlee charted an economic course designed to save 784 million dollars annually. He also ordered a cut of 400 million dollars in dollar imports.

THUS did the prime minister plot a course of more austerity for the British people.

The savings effected, or hoped to be effected, would result from lopping off spending for national defense, capital investments, public relations and food subsidies.

Attlee presented a quick, graphic interpretation of what was proposed. "We must reduce expenditure and increase production," he told the house of commons. But it wasn't as simple as the formula would seem to make it.

To the already austerity-weary Britons it meant that many of the goods for which they now have to stand in line for hours would be even more scarce. Gasoline and some food items would cost more. They would have to pay a 14-cent fee for medicines they were getting free under the national health program.

GOLD RUSH

Pea-Size Nuggets Cast New Yukon Spell

The spell of the Yukon was reaching out again to heat the blood of men who seek quick fortunes in gold. Reports of nuggets "the size of peas" being found near Fishwheel in Alaska had been flashed throughout the territory and a new gold rush was on. Grizzled sourdoughs, untried tenderfeet vied with each other to stake claims for the precious metal.

Planes loaded with excited men, and mining equipment and husky dog teams were pushing into the area in a race with the arctic winter which would paralyze all mining efforts. The village of Fishwheel was mushrooming overnight like the famed cities of the fabulous Yukon of the earlier gold rush days. The lure was like a magnet, reaching out with impelling force.

CHICAGO.—Are accidents now the leading cause of death in America?

In a sense—yes. Accidents take a greater toll of productive years than any one natural cause of death, according to a study by the American Medical Association.

More actual deaths still are caused by heart disease, cancer and cerebral hemorrhage. But the report points out that such deaths usually befall older persons after their working lifetimes are ended.

In the usual working age span of 20 to 65, accidents claimed 1.75 million work years; heart disease, 1.5 million; pneumonia, one million; and cancer, one million, forty thousand.

Properly staged, a marionette show creates an amazing illusion of size in the minds of the audience. Instead of seeming their actual height, the marionettes appear to be of almost human size, an effect which is greatly increased because the scenery is also made to correspond.

Poker From Persia

It is believed that poker is an adaption of a Persian game and was brought to the United States by way of New Orleans. Full-deck poker with 52 cards was not played until about 1830, while "draw" poker did not come into existence until the Civil war.

"Busy Little Aunt"

Everyone is familiar with the little black "Argentine ant". It swarms into homes, getting into food, and in the garden it destroys flowers. On the farm it is injurious to citrus and other fruits and to shade trees by attacking the blossoms and by distributing, establishing and protecting mealy bugs, aphids and scale insects. These insects are widely known for their social organizations.

Say, I'd like to have you meet a couple of good friends of mine over at Flandreau, South Dakota. I'm talking about Mr. and Mrs. Roy Armstrong. There was a bad electrical storm down that way not long ago, and Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong saw what they thought was a crossarm on fire on the Otter Tail Power Company line about a mile east of their home.

So Mr. Armstrong hustled into a rain coat and braved the storm to investigate. Sure enough, it WAS a burning crossarm. Right away he got in touch with the Otter Tail man at Colman —Cy Homes. Cy didn't let any grass grow under his feet, either; and in no time at all the trouble was corrected, without any interruption in service, thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong.

The Otter Tail people sure appreciate having folks tell them about things like that . . . even the little things like a broken insulator or the branch of a tree scraping a power line. Lots of times trouble can be stopped before it starts. It's not possible for Otter Tail crews to INSPECT 5,000 miles of lines every day—but for ordinary emergencies they can be on the job in your neighborhood pretty quick.

Speaking of emergencies, here's a picture of the big Dispatching Board at Hoot Lake. (That's chief dispatcher Charlie Sachs on the phone and Phil Van Buren beside him). Every town in the system and every pole-top switch and transformer is shown on this map, which is 20 feet long by 8 feet deep. When trouble develops, the dispatchers (there are five of them) can tell at a glance where it is and how to cope with it.

There I go again—talking about trouble! Guess maybe that's because there's so much danger connected with power-line trouble. For instance, I have to fight myself to keep from blowing a fuse every time I see somebody moving a house, a granary, a grain elevator, or anything like that, down the highway.

Here's the reason: So many folks FORGET—and the first thing you know the equipment they're moving hits a power line. People have been killed that way. No matter how HIGH the line is, make sure whatever you're moving will pass UNDER it without making contact. If in doubt as to clearance, please check with the nearest Otter Tail Power Company representative. A little precaution may save lives.

Well, I gotta go now. Cousin "Bizzy" says we have to get started. We're going to be plenty busy this month keeping electric ovens hot for "turkey roastin'." Happy Thanksgiving!

Old Spanish Proverb

An old Spanish proverb says: He who would bring home the wealth of the Indies must carry the wealth of the Indies with him. To this Samuel Johnson, an indefatigable traveler, added: "So it is in traveling. A man must carry knowledge with him if he would bring home knowledge."

Collector of Pennies

Penny Edwards starts each day's work by begging a penny. She thinks it brings her luck, and keeps a special book in which the pennies are pasted over the names of their donors. Christened Millicent, she got the name Penny from the last portion of her given moniker.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Clam Chowder Can Be Dynamite!

If Smiley Roberts is a friend of yours, like he is mine, and if you want to keep his friendship, like I do, don't ever let him hear you say that good clam chowder can be made without cream.

In New England, where Smiley comes from, friendships have been broken over tomatoes versus cream in clam chowder. Experts say that south of Boston the tomato reigns supreme, but north of Boston it's cream—or else!

From where I sit, whether it should have cream or tomatoes is simply a matter of taste. This is plain to anyone who doesn't come from clam chowder country.

What a great world this would be if we could all see that most prejudices are matters of taste only. Some like hot coffee. Some like it iced. Some people like a temperate glass of beer. Others prefer ice-cold lemonade. My grandmother used to say, "Prejudice that sees only what it pleases, cannot see very plain."

"Dealing Through LAND O' LAKES Has Paid For Me"

"When you're dealing with your own organization," says Goodwin Traaseth, "you can be sure of getting what's coming to you.

"Ever since I started farming, I've dealt through Land O'Lakes. It's certainly paid off for me. There's always a market for the milk from my 15 Holsteins. But beyond that, there are savings in processing, distribution and selling that I share as an owner-patron.

"Fair and square treatment—always—makes Land O'Lakes a good deal for any dairy or poultry farmer."

Christmas Seal Sale to Start

Christmas Seal workers everywhere in the United States have encircled the date, Nov. 21 on their calendars, it was announced this week by George Pauluk local Christmas Seal Chairman. That day will mark the beginning of the 43rd annual campaign to raise funds for fighting tuberculosis.

Members of the local committee are: Mrs. Inga Berget, who is serving as treasurer, A. P. Thompson and George Pauluk.

Minnesota has made one big change in its Christmas Seal selling this year, Mr. Pauluk announced.

Formerly many Minnesota people, especially those in rural communities, bought their Seals from school children. This year children will not do any selling. Instead, families in every county whether they live in cities, towns or farms, will receive their supplies of Seals through the mail.

"The mail sale method has proved more business-like, since Seals arrive in perfect condition and every purchaser is given proper credit for his contribution," the chairman stated. "Then, too, the letter accompanying the Seals tells the story of the TB fight.

Notice to the Public

THANKSGIVING

Thanksgiving means guests and guests mean a neat, cleverly decorated house. This year be original and use decorations from your garden, lawn or the fields and weeds.

Vegetables, flowers, leaves, branches, seed pods all can be cleverly used in your decorative scheme and are easily obtained.

A basket of gay bittersweet will brighten up any dull corner. Several branches of colored leaves combined with orange Chinese lanterns make a picture when placed in a copper bowl. Even weeds often have unusual seed pods which can be put to use in the house.

A string of Indian corn in all shades of orange, yellow and brown can be hung in the kitchen to give the room that Thanksgiving atmosphere. Strings of gourds are equally as successful.

Even the turkey will taste better if your dining room table is decorated in a festive way. A heaping basket of fruit may be used as a center piece. A few bright leaves around the table to add color or they may be used as placecards by pasting a small strip of orange or yellow paper on each. Gourds or even vegetables in a basket make up another center-piece idea.

If you wish to take more time make a turkey out of vegetables such as squash. Use a gourd for the head, a red pepper for the comb and some real turkey feathers for the tail. Place it in a basket of leaves.

If you are entertaining a large number of guests and wish suggestion for place-carda, tiny turkeys can be made from small cones for bodies, pipe cleaners for heads and feet and feathers for the tails. A small dab of paraffin will hold this tail on.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Spokely and son of Neilsville visited at the Bratteli home Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hanson and children of Plummer visited at the Oakey home Sunday.

RED CROSS RECREATION PROGRAM HELPS HOSPITALIZED SERVICEMEN

Providing recreation and entertainment for hospitalized and convalescent servicemen is an important Red Cross job at military hospitals. These Red Cross hospital recreation workers take a group of patients for a tour of Mammoth Cave, Ky., during an outing sponsored by a community service organization.

Any woman will tell you she'd rather nurse five sick children than one sick man. Doctors and nurses are inclined to agree with her. A man resents being helpless and is often beset by fears for himself and his family.

Unlike the patient in the civilian hospital, who undergoes his convalescence at home, the soldier remains in the hospital until he is completely fit for duty. After the acute phase of the serviceman's illness is past, he is sent to a "reconditioning ward," where he remains until he is able to take up his regular military job. Sometimes he remains there for weeks. And usually he is far from home.

For recreation and simple, pleasurable activities to fill those long hours of convalescence, military physicians in post hospitals look to the American Red Cross and its corps of specially trained recreation workers.

Recreational programs are adapted to the needs of both the man confined to his ward and the convalescent. They range from teaching a bedridden man to play solitaire to dances and bingo games for the man on the road to recovery.

There are motion pictures for both ward patients and the covalescent, and for the ambulatory patients there are tickets and transportation to nearby ball parks and theaters.

There are also the special services provided by volunteer workers. Gray Ladies run errands and write letters, Motor Service provides transportation. Volunteer Services, working with other community agencies, help bring into the hospitals boys and girls of the same age group as the hospitalized serviceman.

Red Cross provides the "home touch" which, added to medical and nursing care, helps restore the sick man to good health.

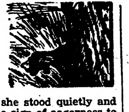
No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON



The Ives family, including Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, face grave problems in their new home in the wilderness. The two men, with the help of neighbors, clear most of the land but they no sooner finish than the heavy rains begin and the women are obliged to escape to a refugee camp for flood victims. The men remain behind to get things in order. At the camp, Mrs. Ives notices that the Websters, formerly very friendly neighbors, are cool toward her. Oreen Webster, a 16-year-old girl who made no attempt to conceal her fondness for Dave, turns her eyes now upon Hank Butler, a much older man and one whom Hope dislikes heartily.

CHAPTER XXI

Virgie Winslow Warrenton stood before the refugees and smiled at them. She was a vivid brunette, lazily graceful. Her black hair swung to her shoulders in a warm, curly cascade. She wore a tailored gray suit that was cut to flatter her slim figure.

Hope watched the girl and knew how easy it must have been for a big, good-natured, earnest boy from the country to be attracted by her. She was beauty, allure, position, and promise—all in one attractive package. Hope wondered how Virgie could come out and face these people, knowing how they felt about her. But she laid it less to bravery than to brass and contempt for the opinions of the homesteaders.

"Hi, Big," one of the men behind Hope called. Then he said, low, "You're just in time, boy!"

When she had finished, there was not enough applause to justify an encore, so she bowed and smiled—looking, Hope vowed later, straight at Big—and left the improvised stage from which her father had spoken. It had been strictly a Winslow affair.

During the announcements that followed, there was a heavy hum of whispered conversation, and many eyes were on Big Halleck.

"I've come for you all," he said to Hope. "What makes you stay here in all this mob? I sent you word—"

"I know," Hope broke in, "but you and your mother have enough to bother about, without us. We'll get along all right here."

"I've come for you," he said impatiently. "Where's Mrs. Ives—and your grandmother?"

"Oh, somewhere around here in this milling madhouse," she told him. The announcements had ended, and people were making their way out. "Don't try to persuade mother," she begged. "It's just a lot better all the way around for us to stay here at the camp."

"Have you seen Andy and Dave?" was Kate's quick question when Hope and Big found her. "Tell me the truth. Has anything happened?"

"You quit worryin'," he ordered. "They're all right. As long as you don't see Mr. Flipp and Mr. Eliot, your menfolks are all right. They're all together."

"But why are they staying there in the swamp like this?" Kate persisted. "I've worried myself sick over them!"

The Men Folks Arrive at Camp

"They've got to wait for the water to get deep enough everywhere," he said, "for them to use the boat. They can't wade the low places, where the water's deep, and they can't get the boat over the higher places till the water's deep enough there."

"Oh!" Kate said in relief. "I hadn't thought of that!"

"You feel better now," Granny said, smiling. "Well, so do I. Blessed if I had thought of that, either!"

Kate remained firm against going to the Hallecks' for the rest of the "duration." Big's only argument with her was that his mother's feelings would be hurt, but Kate parried that with:

"No, being a mother, she will understand, I know."

As Big was turning away to leave them, Birdie Webster and Mrs. Buckley came past. Just where they could have been going so purposefully was a mystery to Hope and Kate for they were headed straight for the men's toilet, forty yards away.

"Oh, hello, Big," Mrs. Buckley called gaily. "All's well with you an' your ma, I hope."

"Yes'm," he said absently, for he was still puzzled by Kate's remark that his mother would surely understand. "Right well."

Mrs. Webster called neither greeting nor question. Her rough, red hands were clasped meekly at her waistline, and her eyes were straight ahead.

A few yards past Big Halleck and the Ives women folk, Birdie and Ida abruptly veered to the left, and began a wide circle tour. They were making their way back to the point from which they must have started.

Andy and Dave came the next morning with Mr. Flipp and Mr. Eliot. Bugler and Jessie Bell followed. Mr. Flipp carried a heavy cardboard box with Jessie Bell's litter of lively pups slipping and sliding about in it as he walked. The dogs were committed to an enclosure devoted to kennel purposes, for no pets were allowed to run loose in camp.

"We had to wait," Andy said, "until we could make it out to the highway in our boat. Came right down the road, the way we came in the wagon when I brought you all here."

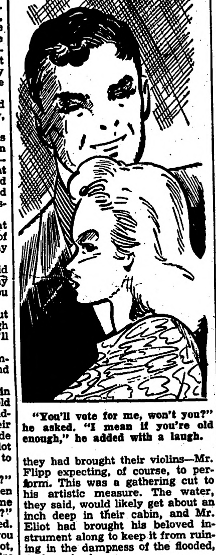
"And there was some current," Dave told the women, "where we crossed the bayou. I thought once that it was going to take us on down the country."

Kate shuddered and hugged Dave again—to his complete embarrassment, for there were people watching!—and said: "Well, thank goodness you've came at last! I've certainly been stewing!"

"We can take care of ourselves," Dave told her.

Andy told them that the water was up to the steps of the house, nearly, when he and Dave left, and added comfortingly that it was rising mighty slowly.

Neither Mr. Flipp nor Mr. Eliot had brought a change of clothes, but they had brought their violins—Mr. Flipp expecting, of course, to perform. This was a gathering cut to his artistic measure. The water, they said, would likely get about an inch deep in their cabin, and Mr. Eliot had brought his beloved instrument along to keep it from ruining in the dampness of the flooded, fireless shack.



"You'll vote for me, won't you?" he asked. "I mean if you're old enough," he added with a laugh.

"We won't play our duets here," he said to Hope. "These people wouldn't care for classical offerings."

Dave had been nervously on the watch for Oreen, and was highly gratified to find her swinging onto Hank Butler's arm. She looked at him haughtily every time he met up with her and Hank, who was beginning to wear a scowling, rebellious expression. Oreen spoke to Dave only at their first meeting, and then she said merely, "Hi'dy, Davey," and tossed her head a little.

The refugee camp was running smoothly now, and the people were as comfortable as they could expect to be under such circumstances. The clear, cool weather held for four days, and there was a hint of spring in the air. It was reported that the water was on a "stand." The bayou should start falling in a day or two.

"Maybe we can get back home before long," Andy said hopefully. "We've got so much to do out there!"

"Stop worrying," Kate begged. "Relax. It's all you can do now."

Jessie Bell's Pups Find New Homes

The recreation committee worked hard to combat restlessness. Some kind of entertainment was offered each evening. And word was getting around that a big square dance was being planned, with prizes to be offered for the best dancers. Leaders in this project, Andy learned, were Mr. Bird and Mr. Burke.

On the evening of the big square dance, Mr. Flipp and Hank Butler were the main musicians, but there were others on hand to spell them when they wearied. Pete Hoskins did the calling. Oreen watched Hank, and Hank watched Hope, who sat at one side and enjoyed the spectacle with Granny and Mr. Eliot. Kate and Andy danced a little, in the set with Mr. and Mrs. Wallace. Dave stood as near the musicians as he could get and followed their playing. Mr. Flipp's swift fingering with stiff, hard fingers fascinated the boy.

Birdie Webster danced her way to first prize for the women. She was light on her feet, and tireless. But her face never lost its one expression of nervous anxiety; and between dances she stood quietly and waited, with no sign of eagerness to dance again—unless it was in the restlessness of her quick eyes.

Winner of first money in the men's division was a tall, slim old white-haired fellow of seventy-something who had come out of the deep swamp. His name was Windsor.

Both Mr. Bird and Mr. Burke made talks that evening. A combining summary of their messages brought hope to Andy's heart.

"Many of us in Newcastle are with you people who are pioneering out there in the swamp." "Someday the bayou will be controlled, and overflows will not come often." "There will be better roads through the swamp, better bridges." "You are opening the last frontier of our county, and the swamp will someday bloom, for the land is rich."

It was a nice evening. Andy went to his cot at bedtime and lay long awake, thinking of the day when his place would be fit to call a farm, when it would bloom and grow and yield harvest.

Jerry Burke Starts Campaigning

Again the rain stopped and the skies were clear. Freezing weather swept out of the north. There was hope of a long spell of good season now. It hadn't been so cold since back in December.

"Well, it's time we had some hope of getting home," Granny said. "I'm ready!"

Mr. Flipp nodded. "It's all right, bein' aroun' a lot of people now an' then, but fer a steady thing it's a bother. I'm gittin' anxious to go back out in the swamp an' settle down again."

"How are the puppies now?" Hope asked, nudging her father lightly.

"Growin' like all git out," Mr. Flipp told her proudly. "Say, Mr. Ives, less'n you want that white-an'-black one that I spoke to Dave about, I won't hold it fer you. They's a lot of folks here wantin' pups."

"I guess I won't need that one," Andy said with grave restraint. "Go ahead and give it to somebody who'll be good to it."

"Shore! I pick 'em to give Jessie Bell's pups to." He looked sideways at the womenfolk and the mournful look that usually foretold an utterance of humor was on his thin face. "'Scuse me, ladies, fer sayin' it, but if Jessie Bell'd 'range to have her young right 'fore a flood, it'd be a lot easier on me! Ain't no trouble a-tall to give 'em away in this crowd."

The people were growing more and more restless. The novelty had long since worn off, and time was dragging heavily.

It was during this time that Jerry Burke, nephew of the lumber dealer, came out and went among the homesteaders, meeting them and telling them that he would be out for county attorney this spring. Jerry Burke was just out of the Army, into which he had been inducted within the year after he had been admitted to the bar.

"I'm starting out again," he told Andy, "and I want you people out there to remember me on election day."

"Well, you ought to do all right in our section," Andy told him. "Just make the people think you like them for more than their votes."

Jerry Burke smiled. Hope, who was present, thought it was as boyishly handsome a smile as she had ever seen. As a matter of fact, Jerry was a very good-looking young man. He had red hair that waved crisply, and wide-set gray-blue eyes and an open, honest face; he was built like an athlete, with good shoulders, a slim waist, and a pair of long legs that had, not so many years ago, won track points for Newcastle.

"This is my daughter, Mr. Burke," Andy said. "Hope, Mr. Burke."

Hope smiled at him and offered her hand, saying, "Hello."

"You'll vote for me, won't you?" he asked. "I mean, if you're old enough," he added with a laugh.

"Maybe," she promised, "but I won't be able to mark the ballot if you don't let me have my hand back."

"Oh—oh, yes!" He laughed quickly, covering embarrassment. And having warned them that he would be out their way, canvassing, Jerry Burke went on to meet and talk with more of the refugees.

"I like him," Andy said. "Peppy young fellow, with a way that gives confidence."

Hope nodded. She was watching him walk away, thinking that he reminded her a little of Bigelow Halleck: each had an open way and each made a person feel his clean strength. But Jerry Burke would, she thought, go much farther in the world than Big Halleck.

Hope was helping with the children who had come down with measles, and was glad of the chance. She felt that she was making at least some contribution to the cause of the refugees, and having something to do made the time pass faster.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Hat Freshener

Black felts and derbies that have become dull looking or rain spattered can be freshened by holding them over the spout of a steaming kettle and then buffing them with a soft brush or piece of felt to bring up the nap.

Limp Veils

A limp veil can be cured by putting it between two pieces of waxed paper and running a moderately warm iron over it. Or dip it in beer, shake it briskly, and lay it out on a towel to dry.

Trouser Cuffs

You can brush out the cuffs of men's trousers easily if you take out the stitches holding the cuff and replace them with metal snaps. From then on, unsnap the snaps, brush, then resnap the snaps.

Drying Shoes

When shoes get water-soaked, stuff them full of newspapers or uncooked oatmeal; let dry away from radiators, stoves and other sources of direct heat.

To clean white braid, wet an old toothbrush, rub it across a cake of mild soap and scrub the braid with it. The lather can be removed with a damp cloth.

1948 Was Safest Year For Industrial Workers

CHICAGO.—Workers in American industry were safer in 1948 than in any year in history, the National Safety Council reports.

Reports to the council indicate that disabling injuries per 1,000,000 man-hours averaged 11.49 for all reporting industries in 1948. This is a 13 per cent reduction from the 13.26 rate the year before, and a new record. An average of 1.12 days were lost per 1,000 man-hours worked in all industries last year, a reduction of 9 per cent from 1947—also the best on record.

In both years lumbering had the highest accident frequency rate, but it was reduced 18 per cent in 1948—from 59.74 to 49.04. Coal mining, with the greatest accident severity rate both years, went down from 7.96 to 7.61, a 4 per cent reduction.

Communications again ranked as the safest among reporting industries in 1948. It had the lowest frequency and severity rates last year, as well as the year before.

Bethlehem Steel Signs With Union; Confusion Shrouds Defense Policy; Industry Profits Reflect Up-Trend

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BIG STEEL:

The Break Comes

The break had come in the steel strike.

The United Steelworkers had signed an agreement with the Bethlehem steel corporation ending the strike for that company's 80,000 workers and breaking the otherwise solid front that had been maintained by big steel in the strike issue.

IT WAS A TRIUMPH for CIO's President Philip Murray who announced that the agreement called for Bethlehem to pay the full cost of minimum $100-a-month pensions for all employees 65 or over with 25 years of service. A social insurance plan also was included in the agreement.

Bethlehem, the industry's second largest producer, was the first unit of big steel to capitulate to union demands for a company-financed pension and welfare plan.

No one could say just how much the pension program would cost the steel company per hour for each employee once it begins operating. It was expected the pension plan would start to function in January and the social insurance program would get underway at about the same time.

Murray told newsmen that a "very conservative" estimate of the pension cost to the company would be about 10 cents an hour, but added actuarial studies would have to be made before the cost could be determined definitely.

THE CIO LEADER said the Bethlehem action would set a pattern for the steel industry, but declined to say what companies he was talking to privately.

"Bib Steel," speaking through U. S. Steel corporation President Benjamin F. Fairless said:

"We renew our earlier proposals to sit down with the steelworkers union in an endeavor to negotiate a mutually satisfactory program . . . of course we will study the Bethlehem settlement."

The question was: How long would the remainder of "big steel" hold out? The Bethlehem pact was a forceful argument for the unions for, they could argue, if Bethlehem can do it, so can you.

STETTINIUS:

Was Hard Worker

With the death of Edward R. Stettinius, another major figure of the Roosevelt era passed from the American scene. The former secretary of state died of a heart attack at the age of 49.

STETTINIUS' contributions to his government were many and valuable. A rich man's son, he scorned a life of leisure and, instead, determined to make his own way, which he did rather well. He was chairman of the U. S. steel corporation at the age of 37. At 44, he was U.S. secretary of state, the top cabinet post. He was lend-lease administrator, taking over the post in 1941, a job in which he directed the 60-billion-dollar flow of supplies that played a major role in defeat of the axis powers.

Youngest secretary of state since the administration of George Washington, Stettinius held the post only 11 months. He resigned to become the first U.S. delegate to the United Nations general assembly. He was one of Roosevelt's advisers at the Yalta conference with Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin.

ALBANIA:

New 'Strong Man'

The Communists were beginning to throw their weight around in Albania. A new Communist "strong man," Lt. Gen. Mehmet Shehu, Moscow-trained army chief of staff, was reported gradually taking over control from Premier Hoxha.

ACCORDING to reports reaching western diplomats, Shehu appears to be the actual ruler of the country. Hokha, Albanian leader for five years, was reported to have been shoved into the background although he retains the title of premier.

The "strong man" is only 36 and he not only is the boss of the army, but also chief of the secret police, interior minister and vice-premier. He is described as the most ruthless Communist in Albania. He gained considerable fame in Albania during the war by leading the first Albanian partisan division in many deadly raids against Germans and Italians.

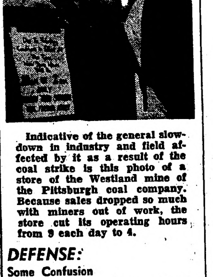
NICKEL CUT:

Howl of Protest

The Eatonton, Ga., city council recently devaluated the nickel and right away got a taste of the trouble Britain is having with the pound sterling.

The value of the nickel went down when the council raised the price of soft drinks by levying a penny tax. The bottling business immediately went to pot. Some stores quit selling soda pop altogether to escape the custmer ire.

Slowing Down



Indicative of the general slowdown in industry and field affected by it as a result of the coal strike is this photo of a store of the Westland mine of the Pittsburgh coal company. Because sales dropped so much with miners out of work, the store cut its operating hours from 9 each day to 4.

DEFENSE:

Some Confusion

It was difficult to reconcile Mr. Truman's constant emphasis on the grave defense problem, that he said confronts the nation, with his slashing of the air force budget which limited the groups to 58, and the more recent decision of the navy to cut 31 warships from the active fleet.

THESE ACTIONS served only to intensify the average citizen's confusion and puzzlement as to what actually is the status of the country's defense needs.

The navy's top admiral had been ousted because he contended present defense policies would destroy navy value and effectiveness. Other navy officials were facing probable punishment for speaking out. Unification and harmony were urged on all sides as a desperate need if this nation is to protect itself in the world of today.

Despite all that, the air force was to be less than it generals declared it should be and the navy was being deprived of much of its strength. This left still hanging the question of who was right in the row over armed service unification and the proper defense setup.

THE NAVY was taking 77 ships out of active service—cutting the operating fleet by 31 warships in line with fund reductions. The fleet by mid-1950 will be made up of 237 combat vessels, instead of the 268 it had on September 1. Most of the cut was to be in the Atlantic force.

It was also reported that 54,891 men will be whittled from the navy and marine corps by next July to correspond with the reduction in ships.

INDUSTRY:

Profits Climb

The first upward trend of U. S. industry profits since the peak of earnings was reached in the third quarter of 1948 was reported in New York.

Profits turned around and headed upward in the third quarter of 1949, the report said, and pointed out that 1948 was a banner year that surpassed even the fabulous 1929. Thus it appeared that industry earnings were at a record peak.

BUT THE PICTURE was not quite as bright as it may have appeared. Washington had a different report. Commerce Secretary Sawyer reported that the coal and steel strikes had increased the number of jobless by 225,000 in the week ending October 8, as compared with early September. It was quite possible that the strike effect had not been felt strongly enough as yet to influence the roseate report concerning earnings in industry.

The future was uncertain. As strikes continued, so would purchasing power dwindle, and with that fall-off would come an inevitable decline in industry earnings.

HE EMPHASIZED that the figures released do not show the full effects of the strikes because they were compiled while the walkouts were in their early stages.

As for industry profit, a compilation by the Associated Press showed net profits of 314 companies amounted to one billion, three million, 664,061 dollars in the third quarter of this year—an increase of 4.3 per cent over earnings of 962 million, 102,819 dollars in the second quarter of 1949.

Bethlehem Appeal

Protestant churches during the Christmas holiday season will seek funds to provide clothing, education, recreation and spiritual leadership for refugees in the Near East.

Church World Service, Inc., overseas relief agency for 23 Protestant and Orthodox denominations, said a special Bethlehem Appeal committee would seek gifts to aid refugees stranded in Bethlehem and other Near East areas.

Effective Cough Syrup, Mixed at Home for Economy
No Cooking. No Work. Real Saving.
Here's an old home mixture your mother probably used, and is still one of the most effective for coughs due to colds. Once tried, you'll swear by it.
Make a syrup with 2 cups granulated sugar and one cup water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Now put 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of cough medicine, and gives you about four times as much for your money. It keeps perfectly and tastes fine.
And you'll say it's really excellent for quick action. You can feel it take hold swiftly. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, helps clear the air passages. Thus it makes breathing easy and lets you get restful sleep.
Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action on throat and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if not pleased in every way.

SIMPLIFY THANKSGIVING

IT'S just an old American custom, this Thanksgiving ritual, but it's one to be proud of. So long may it endure! And don't let any modern dietitian talk you into substituting baked fish for stuffed turkey, or fruit soufflés for pumpkin pies. Serve a one-hundred-percent Thanksgiving dinner, but select foods which can be used also for a later buffet supper.

For no matter how adequate the dinner, there's going to be a supper. You know that. You know that along late in the evening, memories of that tender, savory turkey and that mellow, spicy pumpkin pie are going to lead thankful folks toward the refrigerator—for just a bite more.

Ways and Means

If you have simplified your menu so that one cooking will serve both meals—the dinner and the buffet supper—then instead of being the harried hostess you can be your own guest for supper. You can linger by the flickering candlelight over good food and good talk, linking up memories of other happy Thanksgivings with these fleeting ones, and you can be truly thankful.

Let's get down to ways and means. There'll be turkey of course. Then order a turkey that is sufficiently large so that you will have two cups of diced cold turkey left over to make a delicious turkey and rice casserole as the main dish for your buffet supper.

There will be celery also to add to the turkey dressing. Reserve the celery hearts to use as one of the appetizers for the evening buffet.

There are many salads that can be tossed together with remnants of the Thanksgiving dinner, but perhaps you would like to make a gelatin salad a whole day before the holiday and put it in the refrigerator ready for Thanksgiving evening. A very delicious recipe for this sort of salad follows.

Preparedness Counts

Your tart shells for pumpkin tarts may be made a day in advance also. Then when you make your pumpkin filling for the dinner pie, make sufficient to fill the tart shells for the buffet dessert. The following recipes serve eight persons:

Celery Hearts
Watermelon Pickles
Turkey and Rice Casserole
Golden Harvest Salad
Buttered Finger Rolls
Jellied Pumpkin Tarts
Coffee, Cider or Hot Chocolate

Turkey and Rice Casserole: Put alternate layers of rice, turkey and ham in a casserole, starting and ending with rice. Use three cups of hot boiled rice, two cups of diced cold turkey and one-half cup of diced cold ham. Dust the layers lightly with salt and pepper. Pour over the contents of one 1-pound can of cream of mushroom soup, and cover with buttered crumbs. Heat until well browned in a hot oven. This makes liberal servings for eight.

Golden Harvest Salad: Soften one tablespoon of gelatin in four tablespoons of cold water. Dissolve with one-third cup of sugar in one and two-thirds cups of boiling water. Add one-fourth cup vinegar, three-fourths teaspoon salt and cool until it becomes as thick as honey. Then add the contents of one 11-ounce can of diced carrots, one-half cup diced cucumbers and two tablespoons diced green peppers. Turn into eight individual wet molds and chill. Serve on crisp lettuce hearts and garnish with mayonnaise. Or you may serve on the same plate with the turkey casserole.*

Christmas Seal Sale to Start

Christmas Seal workers everywhere in the United States have encircled the date, Nov 28 on their calendars, it was announced this week by George Pauluk local Christmas Seal Chairman. That day will mark the beginning of the 43rd annual campaign to raise funds for fighting tuberculosis.

Members of the local committee are: Mrs. Inga Berget, who is serving as treasurer, A. P. Thompson and George Pauluk.

Minnesota has made one big change in its Christmas Seal selling this year, Mr. Pauluk announced.

Formerly many Minnesota people, especially those in rural communities, bought their Seals from school children. This year children will not do any selling. Instead, families in every county whether they live in cities, towns or farms, will receive their supplies of Seals through the mail.

"The mail sale method has proved more business-like, since Seals arrive in perfect condition and every purchaser is given proper credit for his contribution," the chairman stated. "Then, too, the letter accompanying the Seals tells the story of the TB fight.

Notice to the Public

All pledges and dues to Nazareth Lutheran chnrch are payable on or before November 27 to get in on this year's books. ~~Please remit to treasurer.~~

420 Deer Taken at Refuge

A total of 420 deer were taken out of the Mud Lake Refuge during the recent five day special season. This total does not include a small number of deer which were taken on the refuge but were not reported through checking stations.

Refuge personel State Wardens and State Pittman-Robertson employees are at present running surveys in an attempt to determine the number of deer not located, and wounded deer remaining in the refuge area.

A great majority of hunters were very cooperative in observing State and refuge regulations, and returning stomach contents, submitting deer livers for examination, andother wise helping in operation of the controlled hunting season. A minimum of violations, consisting mostly of posting on refuge roads, occured.

To our knowledge, no accident of any type occured on the refuge area. Only three individuals were reported as lost and these hunters were quickly located and aided in finding their way back to refuge roads.

In all, the entire operation was a considerable success.

Additional information regarding the hunting season on the refuge will be made available to the public at a later date.

Grace Hollon - Oscar Furr Wed

News was received here this week of the marriage of Grace Hollon and Oscar Furr on Nov. 3 ~~at the Lutheran parsonage, at~~ Glendale. Calif., by Rev. Sorenson. They will make their home at 1243 So. Adams, Glendale. Oscar's many friends here wish for for them much happiness and contentment.

Born to Dr. and Mrs. Stilaf Anderson, Elma, Iowa, a boy, Nov. 8th.

Obituary of Mrs. Alvin Saxberg

Funeral Services were conducted at the Evangelical Lutheran church on Thursday for Mrs. Elvin Saxberg, who passed away Friday, Nov 17th.

Mrs. Clarice Saxberg was born at Karlstad, July 23. She married Elvin H Saxberg at Torrance, Calif. on March 11, 1944. They lived there four years during which time she was employed in aircraft work. Mr. and Mrs. ~~Saxberg moved to Roseau~~ two years ago where they built themselves a nice home.

She received her education near Karlstad and graduated from Karlstad High school in 1940.

Mrs. Saxberg was only twenty seven years old. She leaves to mourn her death her husband, two sisters and three brothers. They are Mrs. Leonard Fredrick of Westmorland. Calif; Eunice Becklund, Reuben, Robert and Russell Becklund besides her parents Mr. and Mrs. Peter Becklund all of Holt. One brother Ralph had preceeded her in death.

Rev. Myhrer and Rev. Vick officiated. Pallbearers were Glen Davidson, Lewis Swenson, Elmer Hageland, Walter Erickson, George Berger and Albert Seidlik

Collin's Funeral Home had charge of arrangements.

No More Permits Issued

Trapping of muskrat and beaver on the Mud Lake Refuge during the period Dec. 1-14. is permitted only by special permit issued to applicants who have qualified. All openings have been filled and there are no further opportunities this season for additional trapping on the refuge. The public is being advised at this time to avoid unnecessary trips to the refuge office.

American Thanksgiving

"Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness Close bosom friend of the maturing sun."
JOHN KEATS.

Thanksgiving in America is truly a season of mellow fruitfulness. It's a season set aside by our ancestors, the Pilgrims, to give thanks to God for bountiful harvests.

Here in America we can be thankful, not only for material things, but also for a "Way of living" that is rich and bounteous in freedom. Every day in every year we enjoy personal liberties that only a democracy can grant.

It is only fitting that we set aside one day to give thanks that we are citizens of a prosperous and free America.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

France, Canada Urge Atomic Pact; British Labor Gets Speedup Rule; G.M. Dividend Sets Industry Mark

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

NEW NAVAL OPERATIONS BOSS CONGRATULATED . . . U.S. Navy Secretary Francis Matthews (left) congratulates Adm. Forrest P. Sherman after the latter was named by President Truman as chief of naval operations to succeed Adm. Louis E. Denfeld. Denfeld was let out because of criticism of unification and defense policy in the armed services setup.

ATOMIC PACT:
Asked by Two

France and Canada joined at Lake Success in asking that all nations do everything in their power to ban use of atomic bombs and control atomic energy.

THE APPEAL was directed to all—and especially the Soviet union—to forget traditional ideas of the soverignty of nations and join an atomic pact that would promote security and peace.

It was a sincere gesture, but about all that could be said of any results that might ensue was that it was a "nice try."

The proposal did have the support of the others in the majoriy group of he 59-nation political committee of the U.N. general assembly, but Soviet Russia was still to be heard from on the suggestion.

The French-Canadian resolution actually meant the majority powers want the general assembly once more to endorse their proposal for atomic control and to order secret talks to continue between the Big Five and Canada.

SIR BENEGAL N. RAU, India's chief delegate, offered another idea in the debate outlining officially his plan for the international law commission to draw up a world declaration for prohibition of the bomb and for control of atomic energy.

But, it was said in official circles, that the French-Canadian proposal was as far as the majority powers wanted to go at this time.

FIRST BOMB WEIGHED TON

According to Stephen M. Alexis, Haiti, the first atomic bomb weighed a ton. He made the statement at a United Nations session. Statistics on the makeup of the bomb have not been officially disclosed, but Alexis said he had his information from a scientist, and that in three or four years there would be a smaller bomb for use by smaller countries.

DIVIDENDS:
New High

Was it a symbol, a portent of the future? Did it indicate the strength of the nation's economic situation, or was it as temporary signboard at the mercy of any real wind of economic recession?

WHATEVER its real significance, industrialists and economists took cheer for it. It was a vote by General Motors corporation of the largest cash-dividend total in the history of American industry. The company, which recently reported a record net profit of more than 502 million dollars from the first nine months of this year, would send checks totaling $190,436,055 to 436,005 holders of its common and preferred stock. The distribution would represent a year-end payment of $4.25 a share on the outstanding issue, raising to $8 a share the amount declared on the common stock this year.

GENERAL MOTORS was also expected to establish a record when it retired out of its own corporate funds its entire long-term debt of 125 million dollars—17 to 27 years before the notes are due.

Plane Record

Commercial planes were darting about the world faster and faster. Latest speed record for commercial planes was claimed by Pan American lines which reported its stratocruiser Westward Ho landed at London in 9 hours and 12 minutes after leaving New York.

Capt. Robert D. Fordyce, Jackson Heights, N. Y., commander of the Westward Ho, did it with the aid of a tail wind which at times reached a speed of 75 miles an hour.

The plane traveled the Great Circle route and its average speed was about 385 miles an hour. The plane carried 21 passengers and a crew of 10.

Only a day before, a Pan American plane flew from New York to London in 9 hours, 21 minutes, which had bettered the existing mark by 20 minutes.

BRITISH LABOR:
More for More

It has been a fairly well established philosophy of trade unions to frown on the "eager beaver" who likes to demonstrate how fast he can work or how much he can produce in a given time. In fact, some unions prohibit members from engaging in any type of production speed contest.

The philosophy is understandable, if not popular. It is one which takes care of the union member who hasn't the ability, the skills or the physical stamina to keep up with the would-be speed demon. The philosophy has been applied often enough for critics to charge that it has amounted, in many instances, to an actual work "slow down."

ALL THIS being a matter of record, England's labor government's move to allocate higher rewards for greater labor productivity came as a surprise to many U. S. supporters of the Atlee regime. They began to speculate whether the prime minister was laying up trouble for himself among his labor adherents.

The British government's turning away from this traditional philosophy of labor was explained on the basis that it must be done to meet growing demands for higher wages to offset higher living costs. Therefore, the ministry is advocating a system of tying wages to the rate of production, rather than the price index.

GOLD HOARD:
Really There

Those skeptical, apprehensive citizens whose dreams had begun to be haunted by the awful spectre of doubt that Uncle Sam's purported gold store at Fort Knox wasn't there at all could all relax. The gold was there, all of it.

ASSURANCE came from a source certainly qualified to know, for that source was Leland Howard, assistant director of the U.S. bureau of the mint. It is his duty to examine personally the gold hoard at least once a year.

"There's more than 12,000 tons of it (gold) at the Ft. Knox depository," he reports. That's more than half of the 24 billion dollars worth of the stuff which the government keeps under lock and key.

OLDSTERS' ATTITUDE

Crankiness in Old Age Linked to Health

According to an Ohio state university professor, crankiness or a cantankerous state in old age is directly proportionate to poor health. In other words, the professor's situation holds basis for the adage that a man is "only as old as he feels."

The professor, Albert R. Chandler, said his conclusion was the result of 503 reports by college students, and young professional people on the personal traits of older persons they knew well. The subjects of the study, the philosophy teacher said ranged in age from 50 to over 80. Results were presented at the second annual meeting of the gerontological society, where Chandler said age itself was no cause for its wearers to be cranky or irritable, the tests showed.

Naturally your gifts have to compete with lots of others under the Christmas tree. So here's a tip. The smokers on your list will make a beeline for your gift first—the minute they see it's a gay Christmas carton of Camel cigarettes or a pound of Prince Albert Smoking Tobacco. These two popular products get a rousing welcome everytime. Mild, full-flavored Camels are sure to please cigarette smokers, and pipe lovers have made Prince Albert America's largest selling smoking tobacco. And you'll like those smart, colorful Christmas wrappings. Particularly when you spot that handy "built-in" card for your personal greetings. Camels and Prince Albert are so easy to order. Your local dealer is well supplied right now. —Adv.

Kidneys Must Work Well-
For You To Feel Well
24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.
If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.
Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.
Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, including Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, face grave problems in their new home in the wilderness. The two men, with the help of neighbors, clear most of the land but are interrupted by heavy rains which flood the area and the women go to a refugee camp for flood victims. There, Mrs. Ives notes that the Websters, formerly very friendly neighbors, are distant toward her. Oreen Webster, a 16-year-old girl who had made life miserable for Dave, attaches herself to Hank Butler, a particularly obnoxious person to Hope. The refugees give a square dance to relieve the tenseness. At that time, Jerry Burke, young townsman, campaigns amongst them.

CHAPTER XXII

That evening she was leaving the building where the patients were isolated, when Hank Butler stepped out of the shadows and said, "Hey, there."

She started in surprise. "Hello. I wasn't expecting anybody to speak to me. That's why I jumped." Then she turned and started away, not wishing to be there in the poorly lighted area with Hank Butler, who must have been waiting for her.

"Wait, Miss Hope," he begged. "I'll walk along with you."

She stopped. "I was in a hurry," she told him vaguely, and tried hard to think of a reason for her hurry if he asked why she was so rushed. "Do you want to see me about something?"

He came up to her. Even in the poor light she could see his black eyes on her—or she fancied she could. "Pretty night, ain't it? They say we'll soon be gittin' back home."

"That's good," She started walking again. Hank was beside her.

"Don't hurry so," he begged. "I want to talk to you."

"About what?" She was walking even faster now, desperate to make the lighted area in front of the recreation building.

Hank's hard fingers closed about her arm. It was a quick, bold move, made with no warning. "Wait," he said sharply.

"Don't!" she gasped, trying to snatch away, but his grip was powerful. "Turn me loose. Don't ever touch me again!"

"Now, Miss Hope!" He was taking a new tack now, and there was no anger in his voice. "I got to talk with you. I'll turn you a-loose if you'll listen to me a minute."

"All right, I will. What do you want to talk about?"

Hank released her arm. "I don't care nothin' 'bout that li'l Oreen Webster," he said. "She's been pesterin' me an' swinging onto me like I was her'n; but I ain't got nothin' fer her."

"Yes?" Hope said.

"Naw. She's plum' boy crazy, an' she's been after me till I didn't have a chance to talk to you. I don't want to make her ma mad; she's got a tongue like a black-snake whup!"

"You are a little old for Oreen," Hope said. She felt that Hank had paused for her to make a comment at that point.

He nodded. "I'm more yore age. She's crazy 'bout me 'cause I play the guittar. It's funny how bein' a good musician will make the gals flock after a feller!" Then he moved slightly nearer to Hope. "It's you that I'm crazy about!" he said hoarsely, and he caught her hand. "I'm a plum' fool about—"

"I told you not to touch me!" Hope said hotly, trying to pull her hand away. She caught his hard wrist with her other hand and pushed, trying to get loose.

Then he had both her hands. He snatched her to him in a crude display of strength, and his arms held her tight. "I'm—fool—'bout you!" he muttered hoarsely.

Oreen Misunderstands Hope's Appearance

A sharp loathing gave her strength—actuality was so much worse than threat!—and she fought wildly. She was so angry now that she had no thought of crying out for help. She tore her right arm free and caught his tousled, black hair and wrenched desperately with all her might, writhing and twisting.

Hank groaned and cursed. He released her body and reached for the hand that was tearing his hair. Hope swung hard and flung him off balance, and as he teetered for a second she slapped him sharply with her free hand.

"You dirty, bad-smelling brute-bully!" Hope cried. Then she tore her hand loose from his hair, avoiding his clutching fingers, and gave him a hard shove.

She ran for the lighted area fifty feet away. She could hear Hank Butler cursing and mouthing behind her, but he was not trying to overtake her.

Oreen was standing at the entrance of the recreation building. "Have you saw Hank?" she inquired.

"Yes, I—" Then Hope saw that Oreen was staring at her, and she realized that she must be quite disheveled.

"Where's Hank?" Oreen asked with sharp suspicion. "You been out there in the dark with him!"

"Hush your silly mouth!" Hope ordered. "He's out there somewhere, now. Go find him. Keep him! Don't let him get near me again!"

"What's all this?" Mrs. Webster asked, appearing behind Oreen. She was studying Hope closely. "What you been doin'?"

"She was out there with Hank!" Oreen put in. "She just tol' me so. She tries to be so high an' mighty, but she sneaks out an' tries to take Hank away from me! She—"

"Hush up, 'Reen!" Mrs. Webster snapped. Her eyes were still on Hope who was trying to straighten her hair before going into the building. "You're a hussy!" the woman stated. "Leadin' a sweet boy on, just like Virgie Winslow led Big Halleck on!"

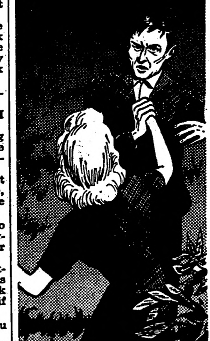
"You're crazy!" Hope said, almost choking with rage. "He tried to—"

"Come on, 'Reen," Birdie Webster said. "They's some people we don't have to be saw with!"

And they turned back into the building.

Hope stood there, trembling. If she hadn't been so angry, she might have cried.

It was two days later that the refugee camp began breaking up, for the water was off the swamp, except in the lowest places, and the roads had dried out enough for wagons to travel them. Trucks and cars must be left on the gravel for a few days yet, before attempting the dirt stretches.



"It's you that I'm crazy about!" he said hoarsely, and he caught her hand.

An overflow leaves many reminders that only time and sunshine and fresh rain can destroy. These are the physical reminders; the memories remain, and the fear of another such time remains.

The yellow water had laid a thickness of mud and silt over the land and on the low brush; and the dead marsh grass was tawny with dried mud, bending low, weighted with it. Drifts were piled in redundant confusion, left by the crazy all-ways currents of the low stage, when each depression enforces its own demands upon the last of the water. On the trunks of the trees was written the record of the height of the flood, so clearly that the boles were faintly two-toned; and this watermark would withstand rain and sunshine and wind for years—or until another flood wrote a higher one. There was a rim of fine drift about the foundations of the Ives house, showing where the water had been, and its mark was halfway up the bottom step. The woods smelled swampy, sour.

Dave and Andy went to work in the mud. Too much time had been lost already; they couldn't wait for things to be convenient and comfortable!

On Saturday Andy awoke with a headache, his first in ten years. He felt "aguey" and feverish, but said nothing to Kate. She would make him go to bed, but a fellow can't lie in bed and get land cleared!

At breakfast, nothing tasted good, but he forced himself to eat. Granny accused him of not feeling well, and he turned it off, he thought, with: "Oh, I'm getting lazy. That's all."

Andy Comes Down With Malaria Fever

But it was by no means all. He came in at ten o'clock from the clearing, his eyes bright with fever, his teeth chattering. He was coming down with malaria.

Kate put him to bed and piled quilts on him, but still he shook and his teeth chattered. He would be all right, he said. Tomorrow he would be perfectly all right.

"You'll be right in bed," Granny told him, "and you'll stay there until we've got enough quinine down you to take hold."

"We don't have any quinine," Kate said. "And it's hard to get now. What else can he take?"

"There are substitutes," Granny told her, "but as Mrs. Webster and I agreed, there's nothing like the old bitter dose. Go see if Mr. Flipp doesn't have some on hand."

As luck would have it, Absalom Flipp had a dark-blue bottle of the sulphate and some five-grain capsules. "I al'us keep it aroun'," he said, proud of being able to help. "You never know when the malarial will strike."

"When can I be up and at work?" Andy wanted to know.

"Oh, in mebbe a week. Now, don't start fumin'. An' if you git too brash an' don't take keer of yourself, you may run into swamp fever; an' that's bad, I mean!"

"I'll be good," Andy promised. "But a week! Poor Dave!"

He soon found that Mr. Flipp's predictions had been accurate. His head roared with strange noises and he dreamed in wild, confused pictures during short snatches of sleep.

Big Ignores Hope on a Visit

The next day, Sunday, he was weak and shaky, but clear of fever. Granny said this was to be expected, and that if he had a severe case his fever would come back up tomorrow. "You may have another chill then too," she told him. "They usually come every other day."

Kate called from the window of the new room: "Come in, Hope. Big Halleck is riding up to see us."

A quick little gladness shot through Hope. She hurried in, by way of the back door. Before the rider had reached the house, she had time to straighten her hair and check on her make-up.

It was high time Big Halleck came! Hope hadn't seen him since the morning they had stood together, listening to Virgie Winslow's song.

She met him at the door and called, "Hey, stranger!"

"Hello." He said it with not much of a smile to relieve the gravity of his expression. "I hear Mr. Ives is sick."

Hope moved aside from the door, making way for him to enter. The look on his face and the quick reason he had given for his visit had driven the gladness out of her. She almost wished that he hadn't come, for she sensed that he was different now.

"Malaria," Hope said. "He'll be glad to see you." She knew her voice was tight, but she couldn't help it. "Go right on in."

"He's not bad, is he? I met Brother Cowann down the road a piece. He looked mighty concerned."

"No, I think it's just an ordinary case." Hope told him.

"Come in, Big," Kate called. "Andy is lonesome for some cheerful company. How did you know he was sick?"

"Mr. Flipp came by the house late yesterday afternoon and told me."

He went into the new room, where Andy lay, and took a chair by the bed.

"Mr. Flipp fiddled on the radio last night," said Mr. Eliot. "He and Hank Butler were guest artists on a hillbilly program—if you'll forgive me for such a loose handling of the word 'artist'!"

Big stayed and talked farming and clearing and drainage with Andy for perhaps two hours. He had already done some breaking, and would put in a block of corn in early March. Late corn, he said, always stood a chance of being ruined by dry weather.

Kate came in as he was getting ready to leave. "We've missed you around here," she told him. "Mighty glad you could come today."

"I've been busy, but I'm caught up with my work pretty well now."

Hope was at the piano when he left. She wasn't playing. Mr. Eliot was sitting in a chair beside the stool, explaining the difference between Bach and Chopin as composers. In a moment he was going to show her something about major and minor chords.

Hope missed a few pertinent facts about Bach and Chopin as Big was leaving, but she appeared to be attentive. At least she kept her eyes on the keys before her as she listened for some word from him. She heard him go out the door, heard Dave talking with him outside, then heard his horse singlefooting along the woods road as he went away.

Hope could have no doubt that Big had heard gossip. If it had reached Brother Cowann, it had probably reached just about everyone. But what had been said? In what form had the talk reached Bigelow Halleck? And why on earth would he believe it?

Dave came into the house. He was highly pleased about something, and he started on back to his father without a word to the women.

"What is it?" Kate asked. "You look like the cat that swallowed the canary."

"Two canaries!" Granny added.

"Big said we might get somebody to swap work, clearing," Dave said, "He'll see if he can find us some help."

"What's that?" Andy called, pleased and surprised. "Who'll he ask to come and help us? Did he say?"

"Checked" Enamel

QUESTION: Is there any way to smooth the enamel on our woodwork without completely removing it? It has several coats of various colors of enamel and varnish on it. There are fine cracks or checks in some of the enamel. Could we rub it with turpentine or something, then sand it before repainting? If we have to remove all the old paint, how should we do that? Use a paint and varnish remover? We want to repaint our woodwork, but those checks show through so that it doesn't look nice.

ANSWER: You have the right idea, but in reverse—that is, you should use the sandpaper first, and then clean off with turpentine before repainting. If you were going to varnish, you would have to take off all the old finish; but as long as you are going to use paint again, I do not believe it will be necessary to take off all the paint, which would be quite a job. But the cracks and checks should be sanded out smoothly so that they will not show through the new finish.

says WALTER E. SCHON, operator, Fosston, Minn., Co-op Creamery

"Yes, creamery operators and farmer-owners both reap benefits from Land O'Lakes. We're both dealing with our own organization, for our mutual advantage," says Mr. Schon. "For myself, I don't have to worry about the price I get for butter. Through Land O'Lakes' efficient marketing, I get what it's worth. In turn, my farmer-patrons get what their milk is worth.

"But there's still another way in which we both benefit. Land O'Lakes' quality field work and production help increase my efficiency. That results in savings I can pass on to the farmer."

Watch Out For The Symptoms!

Laughed out loud when I heard Hoot Davis was down with Chicken Pox. A man of forty-five catching a kid's disease!

So I went to see him, armed with jokes about "second childhood" but forgot them fast when I got there. Hoot looked terrible and had quite a fever.

While we talked, I come to think of how Chicken Pox is a lot like other "diseases"—diseases of the character, such as intolerance, self-righteousness or just plain ignorance. They're excusable in children, but when they come out in adults they're ten times as bad—and can be mighty "contagious."

From where I sit, we should all watch out for the "symptoms"—little things like criticising a person's preference for a friendly glass of temperate beer or ale. We've seen personal freedom wither away in other countries, when individual intolerance was allowed to get out of hand and become a nation-wide epidemic.

PMA Meeting Here Dec. 6.

PMA Committees which will administer the national farm program in local communities of Marshall County during 1950 will be chosen at a series of election meetings to be held Dec. 6. A. E. Strandquist, Chairman of the county Production and Marketing Administration comittee revealed today.

Three farmers who will serve on the community committee, two alternates and a delegate to the county convention which will name the county PMA Committee will be elected at each of the township meetings.

All farmers who participated in any phases of the national farm program the past year are eligible to vote in the election of PMA committees, which were formerly known as "Triple-A" committees. Terms are for one year.

Duties of the farmer-committee men who are elected include recommending programs, determining acreage allotments, and otherwise administering Federal farm programs: choosing conservation practices for which Federal assistance is offered in Marshall county; allocating among farmers the funds available for meeting conservation needs; and handling price support operations, including commodity loans and purchase agreements.

"This next year will be a crucial one for farmers. I urge every Marshall county farmer to use his ballot so we can have an ~~effective farm program with~~ efficient administration", A. E. Strandquist said.

Election meeting will be held for Holt and East Valley townships will be held at the Holt School at 8:00 p. m. and Excell at the Steiner Hall at 8:00 p. m.

Date of the county convention will be at Warren on Dec. 7 at 10:00 a. m.

Marionette Shows

Properly staged, a marionette show creates an amazing illusion of size in the minds of the audience. Instead of seeming their actual height, the marionettes appear to be of almost human size, an effect which is greatly increased because the scenery is also made to correspond.

Eggs Essential Food

If you're average, you eat 400 eggs a year, states a bulletin today from the Minn. State Medical association. And food that occupies such an important place in the diet, deserves careful selection and preparation.

Eggs rival milk as nature's most nearly complete food—containing as they do all major vitamins except ascorbic acid. And they are versatile enough so that the housewife has little trouble preparing them in ways acceptable to the whole family.

Growing Heifers

Hay and pasture are the cheapest and best sources of nutrition for growing heifers, but they should be supplemented with one pound of grain per animal.

Soil for Flats

Soil from woods or uncultivated areas is good for use in flats for growing young plants, as usually such soil is fairly free from plant diseases such as damping-off.

Source of Trouble

Nails and pieces of wire strewn around pastures or carelessly allowed to fall into feed racks are a frequent cause of severe internal injury in cattle.

Farm Doctor Bill

During 1948 farmers in the United States lost 17 million work days from accidents. Their combined doctor bill was 36 million dollars.

Graded Butter

Check the butter you buy for the letters "U.S." in the grade mark, which signifies that the butter is federally graded.

It Fools the Eye

A house with a light roof that seems too high for its width can be made to seem lower by painting the roof a dark color.

Prevents Mold

Building a fire in the fireplace or stove or turning on the heating system to dry out the home is effective in preventing growth of molds in wet weather.

Curious Custom

One of the curious cemetery customs in parts of North Carolina is the decoration of graves with burned-out electric light bulbs.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, consisting of Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, move to the wilderness to make a home of their own. Before the land is cleared away the rains come, driving them to a refugee camp for flood victims. While there, they are snubbed by the Websters, once friendly neighbors. A square dance is given to relieve the tenseness of the situation and Hank Butler, a guitar player, takes advantage of the party to try to kiss Hope. She struggles away from him but while doing so, is disheveled. Before she can repair the damage, she is seen by Mrs. Webster and her daughter, Oreen, who immediately believe the worst. Andy comes down with malaria fever.

CHAPTER XXIII

Dave went in to the bed. "He didn't say, but he talked as if it's a common thing out here, to swap work."

"When would we have the time to pay it back, though?" Andy asked. "We don't have the time even for our own!"

"We might be able to pay back work next fall," Dave said. "Big told me that."

Andy said, "Gee whiz, that Big Halleck's a fine fellow!"

His fever came up late that night, but, aside from the discomforts imposed by the quinine, he felt better than on Saturday morning. He hoped to high heaven that he wouldn't have another chill; that was misery!

Hope was awake early on Monday morning. She was in the kitchen getting breakfast when her mother came in. Dressed in a pair of Dave's denim pants and a blue work shirt, she looked smaller.

Kate stopped short and surveyed her. "Why that rig?" she inquired. "You look like a boy with bobbed hair."

"And with too much width at the hips," Hope added. "Dave must be built like a snake! These pants are too tight."

"You've slacks," Kate reminded her. "Why put on Dave's work pants?"

"I'm going to help with the clearing."

"You're not, any such thing!" Kate said flatly. "What help could you be with an ax or a crosscut saw? Besides, you'd get all scratched and scarred trying to handle briars and brush."

"A young woman, who is of age," Hope said with dignity, "should be able to choose her occupation."

"If she's of age," Kate told her, "she should have more gumption than to try clearing land!"

It was during this discussion that Big Halleck arrived. He was dressed in overalls and jacket, wearing heavy shoes and an old gray felt hat that was sweat-streaked at the band.

"We have a breakfast guest," Granny announced, brushing her hair as she came into the kitchen. "Hope, go out and receive him."

"In this outfit! What's he here for at this time of day, anyway?"

Dave answered her, for he had just piled from bed and had reached the main room, still putting on his clothes. "I bet he's going to help me today! This is pretty swell, I'll say!" Then he saw Hope. His mouth flew open. Then he clamped it shut and advanced upon her with a scowl. "Go get my britches off!" he ordered. "You ought to be ashamed of—"

"Britches!" Hope groaned. But she was leaving the kitchen in a hurry. "Britches! You'll be talking like Mr. Flipp in another month!"

Dave went out to meet Big Halleck.

"Hey, Big," Andy called as they came in, "what are you up to?"

"Dave and I are swappin' some work." Big went to the door of the new room. "You sound better. And, say, don't worry about bein' here in bed while we're down there at work. When Dave goes to pay me back, I'll make him wish he'd kept quiet about this new ground."

Andy looked at his neighbor. "They call you right," he said gratefully. "There couldn't be a better short name for you than 'Big'!"

When Hope reached the kitchen, she was wearing a fresh dress.

"You look better!" Dave said, nodding as he appraised her. He turned to Big, who was taking a cup of coffee—he had eaten breakfast at home. "I just chased her out of my britches," he said.

Andy Gets Up And Around Again

Out of the corner of her eye, she could see that Bigelow Halleck's face was very grave. His greeting had been restrained, and when their eyes had met, briefly, she had sensed a hardness and an aloofness that had risen within him.

The clearing went fast that day. At noon Dave was very tired, but very happy. "Big can do more than dad and I put together!" he marveled. "If we give him two days' work for every one he gives us, we'll still be in debt to him!"

"Make it three days to one," Big said, grinning. "I told you I'd get it back in good measure! Anyway, I ought to do more than you and Mr. Ives; I'm big and stout enough!"

They went back to work before the clock had struck one. Hope stood at the kitchen window and watched them go. Dave looked so little and so slim beside Big. They were talking and laughing as they walked.

"You'll marry him someday," Granny said gently.

Hope turned on her. "Honest? Tell me more."

"That ought to be enough for one time." Granny smiled. "And stop your blushing. You've thought of him in that way, haven't you?"

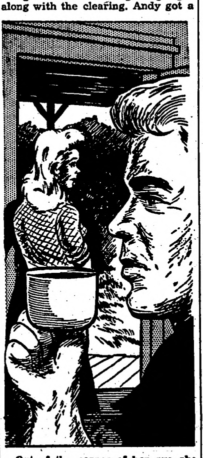
"It isn't a fair question."

"You're right," Granny admitted. "A normal girl thinks of just about every fine, strong man she comes to know and like, as a prospective husband. It may be just a passing thought, but it comes. Nature sees to that."

"Why, Granny!" Hope laughed, trying to be light about the whole thing. "Were you like that? My own grandmother?"

"It isn't a fair question," Granny told her. "Look here, young lady, if I were your age, I'd set my cap for Big Halleck, and I'd throw just about everything in the book at him."

Big and Dave were getting right along with the clearing. Andy got a full report each evening, and through Dave's talk he could fairly see the new ground widen.



Out of the corner of her eye she could see that Bigelow Halleck's face was very grave.

More Trouble Confronts Andy

The mustard was popping up. The English peas were making a line of soft green along the drill. The onion sets were sending up sharp spikes of dark green. Andy walked out Wednesday morning and stood for a long time looking at these evidences of the first planting on his own land. It was, he thought, as beautiful a thing as he had ever seen.

Hope joined him there. "Hey, farmer!" she said. "What's the score?"

"The home team's winning. I thought they had us for a while, though!" He stamped a clod to bits at the edge of the plowed ground. "It's pretty dull for you here, isn't it, honey?"

"Why for me?" she asked. "Is it any livelier for the rest of the tribe?"

"Well, there are reasons why it ought to be tough on you," Andy said. "At your age—"

"I'm doing all right, now," Hope interrupted. "You stop worrying about me. We settled that before leaving Harbisonville."

"You couldn't know what it was like them. You do now. And you've been a peach. Look, there ought to be some nice young people in Newcastle for you to get in with."

Hope was considering this idea, which had been in her mind several times, when they heard Deefy in the distance.

"Must be tellin' ever'body concerned that he come th'oo the overflow all right," said Mr. Flipp, for he had come up behind Andy and Hope as they listened.

Andy nodded. "Maybe so. I guess I'll always feel a little obligated to Deefy for the favor he did me, breaking up the warden's little trick."

"I don't reckon he done it as a favor to anybody," said Mr. Flipp, "but it worked out that way. He just saw a chance to get a lot of fresh meat at one lick, so he took the doe."

"Let's think he knew it would be a favor," Hope said.

"Suits me. 'Tain't no harder." He scratched his stubbled chin. "Too bad he cain't tote about a hund'ed new hawgs off into the swamp! That would be a favor."

"New hogs?" Andy asked quickly. "What do you mean?"

"Sig Flanagan brought two big truckloads out yestiddy evenin' an' unloaded them t'other side the bayou bridge."

"And when the bayou gets low they'll swim right across," Andy said.

"Them that ain't crossed on the bridge. A hawg gits aroun'."

"I was thinking that maybe we could put up a gap at this end of the bridge," Andy said. "This woods road isn't exactly a public highway."

"But the bridge was put there by the county, an' the taxpayers footed the bill. You wouldn't have no luck with a gap like that."

Andy felt trouble closing in on him. Already there were too many hogs in the swamp, and each was potential trouble. Now a hundred more! Then their progeny! There were other areas of the swamp where no settlers had come in. Why wasn't that being used as a hog range? He put this sensible question to Mr. Flipp.

"Well, they's roads in this here part, an' when it's time to round up hawgs to kill or to sell, trucks kin be drove in. It's handy." He made a half-circle gesture with his thin right hand. "All the ter'tory in the big bend of the bayou lies that-away. Yore place is the only homestead in it, an' now you're right smack in the way of the hawgs. It was a hawg range 'fore it was a homestead."

"And these new hogs," Andy said, "may have been put out here more to worry me than for the profit they may make for Flanagan. They—I mean, the deer-hunting crowd didn't want this place homesteaded."

"They pointedly didn't!" Mr. Flipp concurred. "An' if they's anything they can do to discour'ge you, they'll shore do it! An' I bet if the truth was knowed, Sig Flanagan's just actin' as front man fer the outfit. Somebody else could've put up the money fer the hawgs."

Hope thought she heard a car turn off the gravel and head along the woods road. She went around to the front. Andy and Mr. Flipp followed. They could hear it plainly now.

"It's not the Websters," Hope declared, with an emphasis that neither Andy nor Mr. Flipp could appreciate.

"They ain't been here in a long time," said the hunter. "Wonder if that Miz Webster got her back up 'bout somethin'."

"No telling," Andy replied. "We've never had a falling out." There was no need to tell Mr. Flipp about the turkey episode.

The car came in sight, a scarred black sedan, and Jerry Burke was at the wheel. He was alone.

"How do you like my limousine?" he called as he slid out. "Picked it up for my campaign. How are you, Mr. Ives—Miss Hope—Mr.—?"

"Mr. Flipp," Andy supplied.

"You're pretty good on names, gettin' ours right like that. This is Mr. Burke, Mr. Flipp."

Jerry shook the lifeless hand of Absalom Flipp, who was measuring him critically. As he turned to say a pleasant word to Hope, Mr. Flipp asked:

"Have you got a dawg, young man?"

"Well, I've an English setter. Why?"

"I'm speakin' of a varmint dawg."

"Well, I don't hunt varmints, Mr. Flipp."

"You're missin' a lot. What you runnin' fer?"

"County attorney. I'm getting out early too. Got to win my first race. Unless you've some special friend running, I want your vote." He grinned boyishly. "Got any babies for me to kiss?"

"Naw, but I'll have a pup fer you sometime."

"But—"

Flipp 'Promises' Jerry a Dog

"A young man just startin' out in life," Mr. Flipp interrupted, "ought to have a houn'. I'll be seein' you, young feller. Good day, all." And he departed from them, confident that at least one of Jessie Bell's next litter was provided for.

"Must I accept a pup in order to get his vote?" Jerry asked.

"That would be about the surest way," Andy told him. "Of course, he depending on Jessie Bell and the law of averages."

Jerry laughed. "That's a new racket!" he said, watching the spare figure disappear among the trees.

They went into the house. Jerry met Kate and Granny and explained his visit. "And to be right frank," he added, "I'm here for more than just votes. This is a growing community. The settlers will be needing a lawyer now and then — everybody does, sooner or later—and why couldn't they come to me? I've no clientele established yet, and this is a very good way to start."

Andy nodded. "They're plain straightforward people, mostly. Talk to them like that, an' they'll believe in you more than if you tried to be sharp and—"

"'Subtle' is the word," Hope said.

"Well, I'm not subtle, Jerry told them.

Household Hints

Among the many uses for sugar bags are aprons, children's sunsuits, luncheon sets, quilt linings and garment cases.

Blend creamed cottage cheese with mayonnaise or creamy type salad dressing and serve over wedges of lettuce. Sprinkle with finely-cut pimiento stuffed olives.

In putting a paraffin top on jams and jellies, first coat with a thin layer, then lay a piece of string across and finish the coating. Let the end of the string hang over the glass. When the paraffin is to be removed, pull the string and it will come off whole.

If you want to remove a soiled line on collars, cuffs, etc., use an abrasive hand soap. It's easier on the fabric than scrubbing with a brush and removes the soil more quickly.

To make cottage cheese, pour two quarts of hot, but not boiling, water into two quarts of thick, sour milk. Let stand five minutes and drain overnight.

* * *

Chopped olives, parsley, peanuts or almonds added to melted butter that is served on vegetables gives variety.

Open Pit Mines

Open-pit iron mines such as those of Minnesota's long abundant Mesabi Range have been a great asset to the nation because output could be expanded by putting more shovels to work. The flow of ore from three Minnesota ranges reached a high of 75 million tons in 1942 in response to World War II demands.

Save $2.00 On This Home Mixed Cough Syrup

Easily Mixed. Needs No Cooking.

Cough medicines usually contain a large quantity of plain syrup—a good ingredient, but one which you can easily make at home. Mix 2 cups of granulated sugar with 1 cup of water. No cooking! Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Then get from your druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This gives you a full pint of wonderful medicine for coughs due to colds. It makes a real saving because it gives you about four times as much for your money. Never spoils, and children love it.

This is actually a surprisingly effective, quick-acting cough medicine. Swiftly, you feel it taking hold. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, makes breathing easy.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, a most reliable, soothing agent for throat and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

West Asks Reds for Peace Effort; Pact Nations Would Rearm Italy; Costliest Steel Strike Terminated

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

PEACE TRY:
Reds Asked In

Russia's Andrei Vishinsky had said, in effect, to United Nations members: Set up an atomic control system of periodic inspection of manufacture and materials, and Russia will let you in to inspect Monday, Wednesday, Friday, this week and next week—but instead you want to inspect from minute to minute, day by day, week by week.

THE U. N. didn't go for that. Russia, its members claimed, was referring only to declared manufacture and materials, but what of the "hidden and undeclared" production and stockpiles. Vishinsky got nowhere with his proposal.

Then, the U. N. turned around, placed the shoe of warmongering on the foot upon which they felt it belonged. The United States and other western powers called upon Russia to stop its "campaign of hate" and cooperate in a 12-point program for peace.

The 12 points were: Stop threatening or using force contrary to the U. N. charter. Stop interfering with the independence of any other country and the fomenting of civil strife. Carry out in good faith all international agreements. Afford all U. N. bodies full cooperation. Promote full freedom of religion and political expression and full respect of all other fundamental rights. Promote higher standards of living for all peoples. Remove information barriers. Participate fully in the U. N.'s work. Settle international disputes peacefully. Cooperate in armaments control. Agree to exercise national sovereignty jointly with other nations to attain international control of atomic energy. Urge five big powers to broaden their cooperation in the security council of the U. N., and to exercise restraint in using the veto.

THE FIRST REACTION of those conversant with Russian policy as it has been manifest thus far must have wondered if the western powers had taken complete leave of their senses in making any such proposal to Moscow. They might as well have asked the Russians to turn over the Kremlin to the Christian Endeavor society, enroll Joe Stalin as a Boy Scoutmaster, and to turn the politburo into a Sunday choral society. Even a kindergarten child would have known better than to expect Soviet agreement to any of the 12 points.

STRIKE ENDS:
Steel Costliest

America's costliest steel strike ended, appropriately enough on Armistice day, with the CIO steelworkers winning demands for an industry-financed insurance-pension formula.

THE CAPITULATION of U. S. steel, bellwether of the industry as regards labor relations, brought an end to the crippling strike. Four smaller firms settled on the same terms the same day, terms which followed the pattern accepted by Bethlehem steel, first big company to sign with the union.

According to a CIO spokesman, the union-company agreement embodied such terms as a minimum $100 monthly pension to workers aged 65 with 25 years service, with the employer paying all the cost, and an insurance program, costing five cents an hour per man, with the company and worker sharing the cost.

FARM RATS:
A Formula

The farmers in the Rio Grande tomato fields were beginning to get results in their interminable war on rats after garnishing their crops with poisoned grain.

A FEW WEEKS AGO the rats were swarming into tomato and green pepper fields near La Grulla, Tex. They spread methodically up and down the Rio Grande until the invasion covered a 15-mile strip, one to two miles wide in places. Farmers lost first pickings completely in several fields.

Then they began to dust their crops with poisoned grain. Said grower Ralph Jones: "That poison sure does the business. It's stopped the losses."

But not before serious damage was done to 2,000 irrigated and cultivated acres.

U.S. PAY ROLL:
Tops 10 Billion

United States government operational expense, long in the astronomical bracket, had reached a total annual figure of 10 billion, 200 million dollars. That figure, in the aggregate, is almost meaningless to the average American. But broken down to show how it affects the individual, it could be brought very much home to the taxpayer. It was costing each American $227 per capita.

Prize Winner

Dr. William F. Giauque, 54, professor at the University of California, was a Nobel prize winner for his work in the study of entropies. The entropy of a compound determines whether a chemical reaction can take place.

ITALY:
New Weapons

Experience, though a hard teacher, is supposed to teach well. In international events, however, this doesn't always follow.

FOR INSTANCE, Italy, two-time foe of the democracies in as many world wars, will be rearmed soon if top-planners of the Atlantic pact countries have their way. Discussions looking toward rearming the Italians under the Atlantic pact already were underway between high-ranking U. S. and Italian military officers and diplomats.

James C. Dunn, U. S. ambassador to Italy, attended the first of a series of closed sessions aimed at modernizing and re-equipping Italy's treaty-limited armed forces under the Atlantic pact's defense system.

ITALY'S RECORD in connection with disservice to the democracies smells to high heaven. In World War I the country started out with Germany and the Central Powers and turned coat only when it was evident her side was losing. In World War II, she started out with Il Duce Mussolini and forsook him only when it became apparent she was on the wrong horse again.

RAILS:
Fares Up

The third fare increase for eastern railroads in the past three years has been authorized by the interstate commerce commission. The increase this time amounted to a 12.5 per cent hike in rail passenger fares in the East, estimated to give the railroads another 67.8 million dollars a year in revenue.

THE RISE applies to the area east of the Mississippi river and north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers. Commuter fares were not to be affected.

In 1947 these same roads were granted a 10 per cent boost in passenger fares, and last year another hike of approximately 17 per cent. Southern and western railroads did not apply for the increase granted the eastern roads.

THE NEW RATES, it was said, would raise eastern coach fares to about 3.37 cents a mile, and parlor-car and sleeping-car fares to about 4.5 cents a mile.

In New York, a railway official said the new increase would boost one-way coach fares from New York to Chicago from $27.30 to $30.75. First class fares would be raised from $36.35 to $40.89.

A-BOMBS:
Men at Work

According to a British-licensed Berlin newspaper, the Telegraf, Russians are operating a plant near Berlin to produce explosives used solely for making atomic bombs.

THE PAPER, giving no authority for the source of its information declared, nevertheless, that the plant where the explosives are being made is the people's owned Teerchemie plant in Erkner, suburban east Berlin. The newspaper story said 600 workers were employed on the project.

It said the plant produced a chemical called "carbazol," which the paper described as highly explosive.

Rocket With 'Brain'

The U. S. air force appeared ready to hold its own in the guided missile department. It announced it had a rocket-propelled guided missile with "human intelligence" in tracking and destroying enemy aircraft.

Launched from a "mother" jet fighter plane the missile, named the "Firebird," is capable of heading off and destroying its objective in a matter of seconds.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

How's Britain Now?

Current news reports suggest that the British are still having a tough time, though things seem a little better with them lately. Actually, it is high time for signs of recovery. How much better off England would be right now—how much sooner she would have come out of the kinks if she had kept safe her traditional freedoms—that no one knows. But if the English mind and spirit come out of these dangerous experiences unscathed, it will surely be a miracle.

(There are those who will give more credit for improvements to the Marshall Plan and to the generosity of the American taxpayer than they will to Britain's labor government.) The sad thing about it is that the Englishman is still the worse off, having given up much of his heritage of freedom and liberty.

Mess of Pottage

The swap has netted a poor mess of pottage indeed. England's experience is the lesson of the century for America. There was the dentist, for example, who took his own life because he found it impossible to operate his office as the government ordered. His suicide note cited too many forms to be filled out for the government and declared he could not do his work and the red-tape too.

What about small business? Take filling stations (petrol there). From a London newspaper: "After two years of deliberations, a committee of 13 men has reported to the government on the technical considerations which should govern the number, capacity, and distribution of petrol stations." Imagine! That is the result, when people hand over their individual initiative to government.

How to Make Tea

Under the heading "First Warm the Teapot," an item in a British newspaper advises that the food ministry is sending out an expert who will visit restaurants in Tottenham and educate the restaurant staffs on the subject of how to make tea! As if by now, the English people have not learned to make tea.

Some of these seem a bit ridiculous. They are. Like the report of demands for "free" wigs having risen under socialized medicine to more than 200 a week—at a cost of more than $4,000,000 yearly. It is reported also that "Application Order No. 2" will entitle hairless men and women to the nationalized wig cleaning and dressing service, once every two months. From cradle to grave, indeed!

Liberty in Flight

In Froxfield, England, K. J. Kilford was building a house. He wanted a round hall window in his new home. But the "area planning committee" said no; the window must be rectangular. "A round window would be out of place in a rural area," the panel declared. Commented Kilford: "There is no individual liberty today." That happened in England.

The whole British story of snarling bureaucracy may remind readers of wartime experiences in America. It indicates, too, that government control clashes with individual freedom. Shall we in America be able to keep our freedom?

Boost Corn Yields 25 Bushels Per Acre With Organic Matter Plus Legume-Grass Sods

Bushel-Boosting Corn Growth Comes From Good Soil Structure, Plenty of Organic Matter, Plant Nutrients and Moisture.

CHICAGO—Corn yields can be boosted 25 bushels per acre, if farmers will build soil structure with a good legume-grass sod a year or two before corn planting, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement citing recommendations by Dr. D. R. Dodd, extension agronomist of Ohio State University.

"Soil structure spells the difference between high and low corn yields on many farms," it says.

"Dr. Dodd point out that most Ohio farmers can get 50 bushels of corn per acre with no sod, or with poor sod. Other growers harvest 75-bushel crops on similar soil that produced a good hay crop for one or two seasons before corn.

"Soil plowed out of well-fed grasses and deep-rooted legumes has life in it. The organic matter added by the rotting legume roots and tops builds the soil structure and gives it mellowness and tilth.

"The way to get a good sod is to feed the soil. Then it can feed the legumes and grasses. Lime, as indicated by soil tests, is vital. And for good top growth and full root development, plenty of fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash as needed is essential."

Topdressing Pastures Adds Grazing Days, Boosts Legume Yields

CHICAGO—Milk pails will be fuller next spring and you will get bigger dividends from extra grazing days and more tons of hay, if you topdress your pastures and grasslands this fall with phosphate and potash fertilizer.

Fertilizer added in the fall helps deep-rooted legumes and grasses make a sturdier, fuller growth, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. The roots dig themselves in more firmly. The plants weather the winter in better condition for early spring growth.

Earlier spring growth means a longer grazing season. It means fewer days of barn feeding for your cows.

Agronomists recommend adding heavy amounts of phosphate and potash fertilizer to pastures and grasslands. Tests at state agricultural stations show that applications of 300 to 600 pounds per acre produce profitable results.

Beginning of Central Park

In 1840, acting on a suggestion by newspaper editor William Cullen Bryant, New York City bought the 840 acres comprising Central Park for $7,389,700. That area is now valued, on the basis of adjoining real estate, at $600,000 an acre, or more than $500,000,000, almost a 750 per cent increase. After the squatters, moonshiners and counterfeiters were run out of the area, 3,000 men worked almost 11 years to give the park its present topography.

U. S. S. Niagara

In a naval battle on Lake Erie during the war of 1812, Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's flagship, "Lawrence," was shot away. The commodore transferred his flag in an open boat to the U.S.S. "Niagara" and turned the tide against the British. The "Niagara" later was sunk as obsolete under orders of the navy. In 1911, it was raised, rebuilt and taken for a tour of the Great Lakes, but sank in Misery Bay again. Under supervision of the Niagara memorial commission of Pennsylvania it was raised a second time and rebuilt.

W. Peterson Re-elected Mayor

The annual election for the Village of Holt was held on Tuesday and was a quiet affair with only 28 turning out to cast their vote. What can be termed as vote of confidence in those who held the offices last year, was cast, as they had not filed but were voted in to remain on the council to serve the important but thankless jobs. They are Walter Peterson, mayor; O. H. Nohre, Treasurer; O. T. Ness Councilmen for a term of three years and Louis Sagstuen, for one year. Mr. Sagstuen was appointed last year to take the place of Walter Larson who became Village Clerk. There was at this time one year left of that term to be filled.

Others elected were Raymond Sagstuen, G. Nordrum and Louis Sagstuen for Justices of Peace. Hartley Peterson and Harvey Sollom for Constables.

The Ringbo 4-H had their meeting in the Ringbo school house Friday evening. A program of Christmas Carols was given and lunch served. The following were elected for the coming year: Pres. Eunice Becklund; Sec. Audrey Christensen; Treas. Vivian Strandquist. Adult leaders are Mrs. H. Swenson, Mrs. R. Christenson and Robert Olson

Elvin Saxberg, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Becklund, Eunice, Reuben Robert and Russell attended a wedding at Salem church near Stephen Saturday afternoon. ~~Mr. Becklund's nephew~~, Garfield Becklund, was married to Miss Mavis Anderson also of Stephen.

Electronic Lightning Alarm

An electronic alarm that tips off lightning's tricks is reported by the South African Institute of Electrical Engineers. It was developed to provide added protection for those who work with explosives, particularly South Africa's gold miners. The device can be set to warn when lightning has shown its hand within a radius of seven or 20 miles, or when an on-the-spot-flash is imminent.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

DOAN'S PILLS

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, consisting of Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, move to the wilderness to make a home of their own. Before the land is cleared heavy rains set in and they are driven to a refugee camp for flood victims. During a dance there, Hank Butler makes an attempt to kiss Hope and in repelling him, she becomes disheveled. Mrs. Webster and her daughter, Oreen, already resentful of the Ives, misinterpret Hope's appearance and start ugly rumors. Back on the farm after the flood threat, Andy comes down with malaria fever and Big Halleck, handsome young neighbor, helps in his place. The family is visited by Jerry Burke, who is seeking votes in the coming election.

CHAPTER XXIV

"If it takes directness, then I'm their man." And, to Hope: "How about riding around with me for a while? I'd be glad to have you introduce me to my future constituents."

"Thanks, not this morning," Hope said. "I know few people here."

He smiled, looked at Granny, "You see, I said I wasn't subtle! A slick operator would have known how to go at it to get charming company."

"That 'charming' sounds rather slick, I'd say," Granny told him. "No, she's right. If she rode around with you, a lot of these people would talk up a regular storm of gossip. You'd lose votes aplenty!"

"Guess you're right. Well, how about this idea? Some evening I'll come out and get the whole family and take you to the show in town. Would that be all right?"

"That," Kate said, "would be wonderful!"

"We'd pay our way," Andy said. "You can't go around hauling all the voters to the show."

"Offer to pay your way, sir, and you spoil everything. I like to look generous! Besides, you're the only homesteaders I want to take to the show. You're not like most of these people. You've lived against a different background. I've wondered a lot about you, out here against this wilderness."

When he left, Granny watched him walk out to the car, and Hope saw that she was pleased with Jerry Burke.

At noon, Granny brought up the subject of the promise of an evening in town, and mentioned Jerry. It was swell news to Dave. Big looked up.

"I know Jerry," he told them. "He's all right. Someday he'll go places."

"Were you in high school together?" Hope asked. This was a good chance to talk with Big Halleck about something!

"On the football team together for two years," he told her. "You'll like him."

This, it seemed, was all he wished to say on the matter. Big had a way of closing a subject without actually locking it shut with words.

Andy wanted to go to work on Friday, but they persuaded him against it. On Saturday, though, he did go to the clearing with Big and Dave and the sight of it warmed his heart. Why, there was enough land open, except for some stumps that could be plowed around and burned in the fall, for a field!

"Big," he exclaimed gratefully, "you're a regular Paul Bunyan! We can't ever do enough to pay you back."

"Dave can," Big joked. "Wait'll fall. I've got a rattlesnakey low stretch waiting for him to clean up." Then, seriously: "I didn't help on your house, for I was busy. I wanted to do somethin'."

An Evening At the Movies

It was by now obvious that the neighbors had dropped them. Big Halleck was the only one who had come since the flood, and Hope had sensed that he was different. Just after returning home from the refugee camp, everyone had been busy and no one had had time for visiting. It was understandable that no one came to the Ives place in those days. But much time had passed since then. Kate and Granny had long since noticed. They laid it to Birdie Webster, and thought the trouble had begun on Christmas morning.

"The case of the unexplained turkey!" Granny put it.

"And there's no imagining what the woman has told!" said Kate. "Good heavens, isn't there anything too little and trifling for some women to start trouble over?"

Hope had been tempted then to tell them the real reason, but she had waited so long to mention it that she kept quiet. She knew that Andy would go to Hank, just as he had gone to Sig Flanagan back in deer season, that he would be even angrier this time. And it was better to let such a thing die out, perishing in its own falsity; stirring it up again would only give it fresh impetus, and ugly tongues another chance to wag. So she had kept it to herself.

Jerry Burke came out on a Friday afternoon, just before sundown, to make his promise good: "Give me my supper," he said to Kate, "and I'll take everybody to the show. Is it a deal?"

"Sold!" Kate agreed. "I was wondering when you'd show up."

"Been busy. I'm really turning on the heat in the interest of my favorite candidate. And if everybody voted for me who's promised to, I'm a chosen man!"

It was a nice evening. Andy tried to pay for the tickets, but Jerry let him get almost to the window and then called, "I bought 'em before coming out to your place, just to be sure you didn't play a trick on me."

"You win," Andy said. "You're subtle enough, I'd say."

It was late bedtime when they returned home. As the taillight of Jerry's sedan disappeared along the winding road that led back to the gravel, Granny said:

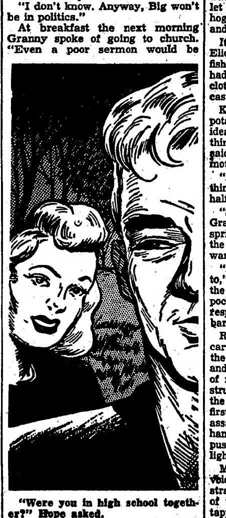
"Big was right when he said we'd like Jerry. Who could help it?"

"I hope he's running for something when I'm old enough to vote," Dave said. "He'll get mine."

"What if he and Big were after the same office?" Kate inquired. "How would you vote then?"

"I don't know. Anyway, Big won't be in politics."

At breakfast the next morning Granny spoke of going to church. "Even a poor sermon would be better than none," she said. "When shall we pile into the wagon and go hear Brother Cowann?"



"Were you in high school together?" Hope asked.

"I'm ready any time," Andy told her. "Tomorrow, Kate?"

"Why not? I've been thinking we ought to go. At least we can see our neighbors there and maybe find out why they've dropped us." She looked at Hope, who was paying strict attention to her breakfast. "You're mighty quiet," she said.

"She just doesn't want to ride to church in the wagon," Dave put in gruffly. "It's 'country.'"

"You make very broad statements," Hope told him.

Andy and Dave left with the mules and the two turning plows for the clearing. Today they would start breaking land for cotton.

"We should've brought the ax," Andy said. "A lot of big roots will need to be cut. Each of us should have an ax fastened to the plow handle or on the beam. I must fix that broken ax."

"Don't forget to get a handle for it, next time you're in town," Dave begged. "Every chance we get, we'll be clearing more land. We want a bigger crop next year."

When they came in sight of the clearing, the corn was sparkling with dew as the first rays of the sun struck it. Then they saw the hogs. There were twenty-five or thirty of them, mostly shoats, rooting busily among the potatoes. They were midway the long rows, but even from that distance Dave and Andy could see the vines lying helter-skelter, torn from the loose soil by the foraging intruders.

"Hey!" Andy yelled. "Soooooeee! He dropped the rope lines and ran, stooping to catch up a club, which he waved as he raced for the shoats.

Andy Goes Looking For Sig Flanagan

"Soooooeeee!" Dave whopped, gaining on Andy.

The shoats saw them coming through the corn. Some of the more timid let out frightened "Oofs" and ran. Several of those left, either stupid or curious to learn why two grown men were acting so strangely, stood their ground and watched Andy and Dave bear down upon them. The remainder rooted faster and smacked in wicked pleasure over their findings, loyal to the theory that stolen sweets are best.

But when Andy and Dave burst out of the corn and into the stretch of potatoes, the lingering hogs wheeled away and followed the others. They made a mixture of sounds in retreat: squealing in protest, grunting, or making coughlike "Oofs!" that suggested hoarse, raucous laughter.

Dave and Andy hurled their clubs at the animals and yelled angry warnings after them. Andy was breathing hard from anger and exertion.

"This is awful!" Andy groaned. "Just look how they've torn up the vines and tumbled them around! This is enough to make a man cry! Sig Flanagan will pay for this!"

"It's just a stretch here in the middle of the rows," Dave offered, trying to comfort him. "And they didn't get all the vines here; a lot of them haven't been touched."

"I see," Andy told him. "It could be worse but this is bad enough. They're coming back again too, if something's not done.

"We'll have to fence the field in," Dave said.

"I may have to, but it's not right. Hogs have no business on my land. I don't let my stock run on people—what little stock I have. And I won't let 'em when I do have cows and hogs and such. I'm going to town and see Sig Flanagan today!"

It was still early morning. Mr. Eliot seldom left with his Saturday fish until around nine o'clock. Andy had time to change from field clothes before leaving for Newcastle.

Kate was very unhappy over the potatoes, but she was against the idea of shooting hogs. "The poor things don't know any better," she said. "Besides, what if you killed a mother pig that had little ones?"

"Don't be sentimental about this thing. I'm not raising potatoes for half-wild hogs!"

"Shoot them from a distance," Granny suggested. "Give them a hot sprinkling, and they'll stay out of the field. After all, that's what you want."

"I won't kill 'em unless I have to," Dave promised. And he left for the field, shells clicking softly in his pocket as he walked. He felt very responsible with the old double-barrel across his shoulder.

Riding to Newcastle in the Eliot car was an experience. Most of the upholstery was gone off the seat and the coiled springs had a sly way of reaching up, when the roadster struck a sharp bump, and pinching the rider. This startled Andy at first; when he realized what was assaulting him he rode with his hands flat down beside him and pushed himself up, trying to "sit light."

Mr. Eliot yelled suddenly, in a voice that was high-pitched in its strain to be heard above the bedlam of the motor, "I believe I need a tappet adjusted."

Andy turned quickly, startled, sure that the old man was being funny. No one could hear so tiny a click as an ailing tappet would make! But Mr. Eliot was quite serious. So, Andy whooped back: "Yeah, sounds a little like it."

That was their conversation en route to Newcastle.

A Piece of Advice That Went Astray

Mr. Bird might know where he could find Sig Flanagan. He went to the hardware store.

"Well, come in, Andy Ives!" the merchant called. "Any cotton blooms yet?"

"Just breaking to plant," Andy told him. "I'm a little late. Who does have blooms this early?"

"Nobody, of course. I thought you might be turning out a miracle out there. What can I do for you this fine morning?"

"Well, I thought you might be able to tell me where to find Sig. Where does he hang out most of the time?"

"Oh, around and about." Mr. Bird studied Andy's face keenly. "Hog trouble?"

"They're digging my potatoes a little early," Andy told him. "Yes, go ahead and say it: I should have got that wire from you."

"Well, I thought it, but I wasn't going to throw it up to you."

Andy grinned sheepishly. "Didn't think you would. Oh, say, I'll take one of the ax handles out of the rack there. Need one pretty badly."

Mr. Bird selected a clear, straight handle, sighting along it for trueness. "This is a good one," he said, passing it to Andy. "A fine piece of hickory. A man your size can't break it."

"I can do some mighty awkward things with an ax," Andy confessed. Then he paid for the handle and left.

Mr. Bird called, "If I can be of help, let me know."

"Thanks," Andy said. "You may get the chance before my crop's made and gathered."

He saw Mr. Eliot's car in front of Santini's Cafe, across and down the street. Nick Santini was one of the trotliner's best customers. Andy started that way, intending to leave the ax handle in the car before looking up Sig Flanagan.

He crossed the street and was passing Harrell's Pool Room when a familiar voice attracted his attention. He turned involuntarily and looked into the poolroom. Sig Flanagan was standing just inside the door, talking with a short, heavy-set man. He looked straight at Andy, and his heavy face tightened quickly.

Army-Irish Tilt Would Be Grim

By GRANTLAND RICE

I SAW Notre Dame beat Navy, 40 to 0, and I saw Army beat Fordham, 35 to 0. Fordham was unquestionably as good a team as Navy was, probably better defensively. In looking at the two leading teams, only a week apart, it would be tougher than merely difficult to rank them.

Both are blessed with fast, hard-striking backs who can pass, run and block. Both have two brilliant quarterbacks in Arnold Galiffa and Bob Williams. They are just about on a par. Williams has a slight edge in offensive worth, Galiffa in defensive strength when needed.

Grantland Rice

In the matter of backfield strength Notre Dame has the call with more good backs—Williams, Sitko, Zalejski, Coutre, Swistowicz, etc., vs. Stephenson, Galiffa, Cain and Martin, also Bob Blaik. The top Army four can match the top Notre Dame four, but Notre Dame can reach in the fist for more runners.

There isn't much difference in the play of the two lines. The main difference is that Army uses two sets of lines. Notre Dame only one. I doubt that Army has a group to match 260-pound Hart, 245-pound Tonneff and 235-pound Martin—all can handle the better part of 60 minutes whenever needed.

Both teams are brilliantly coached. Both have the ability to strike with such speed and devastation they can wreck good teams in less than 10 minutes. Army's defensive line is about as strong as Notre Dame's. I'm not sure her offensive play is quite as good, although it is deeper.

Norte Dame proved against Michigan State that Frank Leahy needs his first team strength against strong opposition.

Michigan State grabbed 14 points before Leahy could blink twice, as he rushed his first team back into action after a 34 to 7 lead.

Army vs. Notre Dame would be a terrific game. Those who have seen Oklahoma in action tell me that Bud Wilkinson's outfit is an even match for either with just as much power and just as much all-around speed. The three don't happen to meet.

Among the unbeaten teams left we have Notre Dame, Army, Oklahoma, California, Boston U., Virginia and Cornell. None of these meet. Every team in the Big Ten, the Southwestern, and the Southern conferences has been beaten, most of them several times. Fordham is among those beaten only once and it should be stated here that Ed Danowski's Rams put up as gallant a fight against superior numbers, competitive experience, and all-around class as anyone would care to see. Outside of some three or four teams, Fordham is a match for anyone today.

Army's Schedule

"Those who are criticizing Army's schedule overlook one fact," Red Blaik said before the Fordham game. "These boys are up at 5:30 a.m., well before daylight. They face 16 hours of hard physical and mental work. It would be cruel to ask them to play a schedule of nine major games. Each year I see the Army team fading out, but its last two games, or losing its earlier edge.

"This year we had Penn State, rated before as one of the stronger teams in the East. We had Michigan—at Michigan. We had Harvard—they almost beat us last year and looked to be a much improved team this fall, until the trip to Stanford practically wrecked the Crimson. We had an up and coming Fordham team. We had or still have Pennsylvania and Navy, two old traditional rivals who always give us a battle to the finish. I claim that schedule is all Army can handle. In 1950 we have Michigan again. We meet a powerful Stanford team at Stanford. We have Harvard and Pennsylvania who must be better than they were this fall. We have Pennsylvania and Navy. All told we have at least seven major games."

Captain Tom Hamilton, while head of Navy athletics, had this belief—"We'd rather be beaten by class than run over mediocrity. Our system is to meet the best."

Navy was not equipped at that time—or now—to have any chance in its schedule. It had the sort of schedule Army should and could have played. Hamilton would play anybody—as long as they were good. So will Navy's present leaders. Navy has certainly earned more public acclaim from this plan than Army has sniping too many second or third graders.

Just to Be Sure

Both men were very good sportsmen. They observed all the rules and never took unfair advantage of an unsuspecting rabbit. It was while they were hunting turkeys that something went wrong.

One hunter noticed that the other was taking careful aim at a bird walking along and pecking at grubs in a rotted tree trunk.

"Hey," he whispered hoarsely, "you're not going to shoot that bird while it's walking, are you?"

"Of course I'm not," snorted the other indignantly, with both pride and feelings hurt, "I'll wait until it stops."

Surprise!

First Hunter—"I'll bet you don't get that rabbit."

Second Hunter — "What makes you think I won't?"

First—"Your gun ain't loaded."

Quick Service

Sean hadn't had much luck with his rabbit-hunting. When he spied a small bird perched on a rock he decided to vent his spleen on that poor little feathered creature. He took careful aim then fired.

He walked over to pick up the bird but found only a frog with its head blasted off.

"Well," he said gratefully, "already plucked."

HOLIDAY COOKIES

Fun to make — these little vanilla and chocolate cookies, decorated with coconut and other good things. Package them attractively for gifts; trim the Christmas tree with them; and keep the cookie jar filled — if you can!

- 2 cups sifted cake flour
- 1 teaspoon double-acting baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ⅓ cup butter or other shortening
- ⅔ cup sugar
- 1 egg, unbeaten
- 1 tablespoon milk
- 1 square unsweetened chocolate, melted

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cream shortening, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add egg and milk and beat well. Add flour, a small amount at a time, mixing well after each addition. Divide dough in two parts. To one part, add chocolate and blend. If necessary, chill until firm enough to roll.

Roll each half on floured waxed paper into rectangular sheet, ⅛-inch thick. Using a floured star-shaped cutter, cut vanilla dough in star shapes. Cut chocolate dough in Christmas-tree shapes with floured cutter. Place on ungreased baking sheet and brush with glaze made by mixing 1 beaten egg with 1 cup milk. Decorate cookies with tiny colored candies, coconut, and silver dragees. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 10 minutes, or until done. Makes about 5 dozen cookies.

"Through Land O'Lakes WE KNOW WHERE WE STAND ON EVERY CHURNING" says I. A. LEIN, manager-operator of the Monticello, Minn. Co-op Creamery Assn.

"We always have a ready market for our products through LAND O'LAKES," says Mr. Lein. "During the past 25 years we have marketed the LAND O'LAKES way, we have benefited from dividends received over and above normal market prices. Our farmer-members—the real owners of LAND O'LAKES—share in these savings, and know that each of them always gets the same square deal.

"The assistance of LAND O'LAKES field service and laboratory means the success of our quality program. We know where we stand on every churning. It's because of help like this that the Monticello Creamery is in A-1 financial condition today."

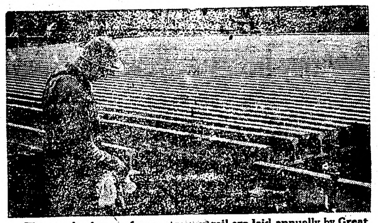
Annular Eclipse

A certain type of eclipse of the sun is called an "annular" eclipse. In such an eclipse the moon appears to be slightly smaller than the sun, so that when the moon moves in front of the sun a narrow ring or "annulus" of light is visible around the moon. This is different than a total eclipse in which the moon completely covers the sun.

Climate of Jericho

Lying 800 feet and more below Mediterranean level, the garden acres of Jericho extend toward the Dead sea, lowest surface level on earth. In summer Jericho is torrid, and waves of heat make the desolate white marl hills seem to dance a witch's waltz. In winter, when Jerusalem lies frozen under a blanket of snow, Jericho, near by and far below, is a sunshine paradise.



Thousands of tons of new, stronger rail are laid annually by Great Northern at an enormous cost, which comes only from revenues for services. Railways are the only form of mass transportation paying their own way—all the way.

Less Than You Think!

A Western politician has been getting considerable publicity on his recent statement that: "The public generally is unaware of the terrific burden that transportation costs place on the prices of commodities, especially foods."

How much more do the railways get from you as the result of freight rate increases since before World War Two? Not as much as you think—in proportion to present day prices for what you buy or sell!!

Since January 1947 the Interstate Commerce Commission has authorized railways to put into effect freight rate increases totaling 57 per cent—the only permanent advances since early 1938. However, because of specified exceptions, only 46.9 per cent of the total increase has been applicable to Great Northern territory.

Appearing below are examples of commodities and articles commonly bought and sold in Great Northern territory. Where it is something purchased, the total increases in transportation costs on it from permanent advances in rates since 1938 are shown from a common source of supply to one of the most distant points on the Great Northern in Minnesota. Where it is something produced and shipped, total increases of freight charges are shown from the most distant point on the railway in Minnesota to a market where it usually is sold.

OVERALLS—From one and three-fourths to three and three-fourths cents per suit from Chicago.*

SHOES—From two and one-half to three and three-fourths cents a pair from St. Louis.*

FRESH MEAT—Slightly more than one-half cent per pound from South St. Paul.

FLOUR—Two and nine-tenths cents per 49-pound sack from Minneapolis.

GASOLINE—From seven-tenths to nine-tenths of one cent per gallon from pipe line terminals in St. Paul-Minneapolis-Superior.

AUTO TIRES—Twenty and three-fourths cents per tire from Akron, Ohio.

GRAIN—From one and nine-tenths to three and six-tenths cents per bushel to Minneapolis.*

CATTLE—Eight and one-half cents per 100 pounds to South St. Paul; thirty cents to Chicago.

POTATOES—Seven and eight-tenths cents per bushel to Minneapolis; thirteen and eight-tenths cents to Chicago.

*Depending on weight.

Considering prices paid and received for those commodities and articles today as compared with 1938, the factor of railway transportation costs obviously is substantially less than "a terrific burden"!

It must be kept in mind that there were no permanent increases in rail freight rates from March 1938 through December 1946. Yet, in the past 11 years prices of goods generally have risen 100 per cent. Railway wages have risen 109 per cent, payroll taxes 90 per cent and fuel, supplies and materials costs 100 per cent in that period.

On almost any basis that can be devised, railway transportation charges today are relatively a lesser factor in over-all production and distribution costs than in any pre-war years.

PROVIDE TB TESTS

Approximately 1000 schools in Minnesota have earned Certificates for Tuberculosis Control in recognition of their tuberculin testing programs.

Nazareth Church Elect Officers

The Nazareth Lutheran church held the annual meeting Friday evening. The following were elected, Myron Gunheim, Treasurer; Chester Larson, Trustee; L. M. Larson, Deacon. Holding over are J. P. Augustine, Oscar Fosholm, Wm. Holst, Herman Peterson. and O. T. Ness.

New officers elected for the Ladies Aid were Mrs. Iver Larson, President, Mrs. Ray Gusa Vice President, Mrs. Robert, Nyval, Treasurer and Mrs. Louis Saxstuen, Secretary.

This Christmas Let Us Pray

This Christmas, let us give thanks to God, who guides our destiny, for the many blessings bestowed on America - free worship, free speech, free press, free ballot, free schools and free enterprise.

As we pay homage to the birth of Christ in our churches and in our homes, around the festive board and Christmas tree let us so value these privileges that we may ever be on the alert to defend our freedom against tyranny.

Let us by our actions and deeds give succor and courage to those less fortunate people who suffer from aggression and oppression.

CHRISTMAS AMBROSIA

Those who couldn't say "no" to that extra turkey serving will bless you for serving this refreshing fruit dessert. Coconut and oranges are combined here to make one of America's favorite — Ambrosia.

- 2 cups orange sections, free from membrane
- ½ cup sugar
- 1½ cups shredded coconut

Arrange layer of orange sections in serving dish and sprinkle with sugar and coconut. Repeat until all ingredients are used, topping with coconut. Chill. Makes 6 servings.

COCONUT DECORATION

You will want to tint or toast the coconut that decorates your Christmas sweets — it makes it more festive. It is simple to do.

How to tint coconut: Place coconut in a glass jar. (Do not fill jar more than ⅓ full.) Dilute a small amount of food coloring and sprinkle over coconut. Cover jar and shake vigorously until coloring is evenly distributed and desired shade is obtained

How to toast coconut: To toast the coconut, spread it out thinly in shallow baking pan. Place in moderate oven (350°F.) to toast until delicately browned. Stir coconut or shake pan often to toast evenly.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Atomic Energy Commission Tells Plan to 'Breed' A-Bomb Material; Building Trades Ask T-H Waiver

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

A-BOMB ITEMS:

'Breeder' Planned

Those duly impressed by the wonders of science through the years more or less expected the announcement—but, no doubt, it came as a surprise to many that the U. S. atomic energy commission was preparing to "breed" the scarce atomic materials that make the A-bomb explode.

HAILED as the biggest step yet taken in the attempt to harness the atom for use in industry, an engineering plant for "experimental breeding" of atomic materials actually was on paper.

According to Dr. Lawrence Hafstad, top AEC scientist, atomic materials, no matter how produced, can be used for either bombs or peacetime purposes. This would include the hoped-for generation of useful industrial power. He declared that the designers of the "breeder" device are confident it would work.

Commissioners and aids also told newsmen that by 1952 the AEC should be building the first model of an atomic engine designed to propel ships.

It will also start work next year on a reactor—an atomic furnace—expected to yield "significant amounts" of electronic power and to "breed" or manufacture more atomic materials as it goes along.

THIS, AEC AIDS SAID, is distinguished from the experimental "breeder" whose primary purpose would be to produce new atomic materials, with power production only a sideline.

Dr. Hafstad said the "breeder" reactor would be built at Arco, Idaho. He added that if it works, it will ease greatly the difficulty of getting more fissionable material. In "breeding," the scientists put some fissionable material in the furnace with a larger amount of non-fissionable. They hope, in the process, to make some of the latter into fissionable material and thus have a net gain.

CHINESE:

Trigger-Happy

The muddled China picture was getting no clearer, and the U.S. again had been put in the middle.

INSULTED by China Communists who had imprisoned (but later released) the U. S. consular attache, Angus Ward, Americans fumed anew as Chinese Nationalists, supposed friends of the U.S., were charged with firing upon a U. S. vessel, the Sir John Franklin. The incident occurred off Shanghai.

The ship's owners released a radio message from the skipper of the ship who charged that two Nationalist warships had ignored his order to halt for a boarding party and had, instead, raked the vessel with a "constant barrage" of shells, almost at point blank range. The ship's owners demanded that the U. S. act to curb the "trigger-happy" Nationalists.

The state department said it would protest "energetically" to the Nationalist government. The U. S. agency entered the picture after receiving reports of the incident from Walter P. McConaughy, U. S. consul-general at Shanghai, who said no one aboard the vessel was injured.

THE INCIDENT was the latest in a series of attacks or other misadventures suffered by the company's vessels at the hands of the Nationalists.

An unexplained angle of the situation was the question of what a merchant vessel was doing—or its rights—in ordering a man-of-war of the Chinese Nationalists to halt for a boarding party.

POPULATION:

U. S. Climbing

According to a U. S. department of agriculture report, the population of the United States will increase by leaps and bounds in the next 26 years.

THE REPORT predicts that the current U. S. population of approximately 150 million will rise to a thumping 188.5 million by 1975—an increase of 26.4 per cent.

The "high level" assumptions on which the report is based are a combination of factors including high fertility, low mortality, annual net immigration to the U.S., and a high degree of internal migration—that is, moving back and forth within the United States.

In Contempt

Attorney Vincent Hallinan, defending labor leader Harry Bridges in the latter's trial on perjury - conspiracy charges, was cited for contempt of court during the trial which was presided over by Federal Judge George B. Harris, in San Francisco.

LABOR:

T-H Waiver Asked

A psychological swipe at the Taft-Hartley labor law was taken by employer association and labor unions in the vast U. S. construction industry. Both joined in asking the national labor relations board for exemptions from Taft-Hartley labor law election requirements.

WHATEVER EFFECT the move might have on congressional action on Taft-Hartley when members convene in January, there was no denying the action was well timed. With employer associations throwing in with labor in requesting the blanket exemption, opponents of Taft-Hartley would find added strength.

The construction industry's major management and labor groups contend that strict application of the T-H law to them will wreck long-standing collective-bargaining practices and hamper building activities.

Here, too, was a scintillating strategic maneuver, for with housing still short and the problem still far from solved, anything which might be considered as an aid to increased building could expect to get some consideration from congress.

UNDER PRESENT T-H LAW, elections such as those mentioned, a vote must be taken before a union can be certified as the proper bargaining agent, and before a union can get a union-shop agreement—one that requires workers after they are hired to become members of the union.

It is a complete waiver of both these provisions that management and labor in the construction agency are asking.

'KICKBACK':

Solon Accused

The long-postponed trial of Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.) opened with charges that he forced a former secretary and codefendant to aid him in a salary "kickback" scheme.

THE CHARGE against Thomas was made by John R. Fitzpatrick, attorney for Miss Helen Campbell, one-time secretary to the former chairman of the house un-American activities committee.

Both Thomas and Miss Campbell were charged with fraud and conspiracy by which the congressman allegedly padded his office payroll and took salary "kickbacks" from two employees.

If convicted, the representative would face up to 32 years in prison and fines up to $40,000. The house of representatives would have to decide whether he could remain in congress. Miss Campbell would face a somewhat lesser penalty.

MISS CAMPBELL'S attorney conceded that she aided in the "kickback" scheme, but only under Thomas' orders, and denied she was guilty of conspiracy. Actually, he said, she went to the justice department and voluntarily told "everything the government knows about the case."

The government claims the alleged plan netted Thomas a total of $812. While he is accused of filing false payroll claims totaling nearly $1,700, it is not alleged that he got all the money.

NEW SOVIET CLAIM

Reds Report Vegetation on Planet Mars

The Russians, whose claims to pre-eminence in discoveries and inventions of things the western world had known and invented years before, were "out of this world" in their most recent assertion of scientific discovery.

This time, Soviet scientists were fairly sure of no contradiction, by means of visible proof at any rate. The Kremlin's telescope crews had come up with the statement that there was actually vegetation on the planet Mars.

An astronomer at an observatory in south central Russia, so the report went, reported that: "Plant life on high mountains and in the arctic (of the earth) resembles Martian vegetation in luminescence. It appears that all wild plants radiate waves."

One of the milkman's regular customers complained to him one day that the quality of the milk lately didn't seem up to par.

"That's because of the time of the year," he explained, "we are unable to send the cows out to graze in this cold weather, and since they can't eat green grass they can't produce milk as rich as they do in the summer. But, believe me, madam, they are just as sorry they can't give you rich milk as I am. Why, do you know, I went out to milk them just this morning and they were all crying because they realized their milk was so thin."

"That's all very well," answered the lady, "but I wish you would see to it that the tears don't drop into the milk can."

Effective Cough Syrup, Home-Mixed for Extra Economy
Saves Big Dollars. No Cooking.
This splendid recipe is used by millions because it makes such an effective medicine for coughs due to colds. It's so easy to mix—a child could do it.
From any druggist get 2½ ounces of Pinex, a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its soothing effect on throat and bronchial irritations.
Then make a syrup with two cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Put the Pinex into a pint bottle and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of cough medicine, very effective and quick-acting, and you get about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and children love its pleasant taste.
This cough syrup takes hold of coughs, giving quick relief. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, helps clear air passages. Money refunded if Pinex doesn't please.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Wilderness, arguments with neighbors and a flood all confronted the Ives family: Andy, Hope, Dave, Kate and Granny, when they moved to a grant of free land to be cultivated. During the flood, the family was obliged to seek shelter at a refugee camp where Hope is involved in an innocent situation that nevertheless causes gossip to be spread about her. Back home again, Andy is temporarily disabled with malaria fever. Neighbors who were once friendly ignore them now and Hope is miserable as she alone knows the cause for it. When hogs from Sig Flanagan's farm get into Andy's potatoes, the latter goes into town to complain, accompanied by Mr. Eliot.

CHAPTER XXV

"Ives," he called loudly, "wait there." He came outside.

Andy stopped. "Hello, Mr. Flanagan," he said, forcing pleasantness. He noticed that the tall, black-haired hog raiser was scowling.

"Haven't seen you in a long time, Ives," Sig Flanagan said, making no offer to shake hands. "Come in and be sociable." But he didn't sound sociable.

"Thanks, no." Andy wanted to tell the man to wait and let him toss the ax handle into the car, but there was hardly time.

"Still sore about my bad shot that day, are you?" Flanagan asked quickly.

"Not at all," Andy said calmly. But he felt far from calm beneath the surface. The anger that he had brought to town, fanned by the man's leer and bullying manner, mounted. "By the way, I'd like for you to see after your hogs before they do me some real harm," he said. "They were in my potatoes this morning."

"That so? Well, hogs will be hogs, you know. They like potatoes when they can't get anything better."

Rage swept through Andy Ives. He struggled against showing it. "You'll have to keep your hogs off my land," he said quietly. Now, he had forgotten that he was gripping an ax handle of tough hickory. All he knew was that he was facing Sig Flanagan again, and that the man was taunting him, belittling him! "I'm making a crop out there and—"

"And I'm raisin' hogs out there," Sig Flanagan broke in. "It was a hog range before you homesteaded. Now, get off, or keep your belly-achin' mouth shut!" He glanced at the handle, moved a step nearer Andy. He was swaying a little.

Andy spoke, and his voice sounded far away. It was like another man's voice, some stranger's, but it said the words Andy thought: "I'm out there to stay. You and your hogs won't run me off. I'll have to shoot your hogs. I don't want to, but I will. I can't work and raise crops for them to tear up."

"Shoot one of my hogs, you low-down woods colt, an'—"

But Andy's fist stopped him there. He struck with all his lean might, and his fist slammed into Flanagan's mouth, crushing lips against teeth, loosening teeth.

Andy swung again, wildly, fury unleashed, and all the strength that had come into him during the long, grueling days of swinging ax and pulling saw was behind the blow. It caught Sig Flanagan neatly on the chin, snapped his head back.

Sig Flanagan lost his balance and fell backward. The back of his head struck the corner of the door facing and he went down in a sprawl on the sidewalk.

Andy Is Framed By the Warden

"Mr. Ives!" a voice called. It was Mr. Eliot, and he was coming as fast as his short legs would bring him. "Wait! Don't be rash!"

Men were coming out of the poolroom. Someone said, "Danged if he didn't hit 'im, I mean!"

"He called me something I don't take," Andy said slowly, realizing what he had done.

Someone was tugging at the ax handle. He turned and saw Mr. Eliot, and understood. He released the handle. Mr. Eliot started for the car.

"Wait there, old man!" someone called. "Give me that ax handle."

Andy's heart flopped wildly, for the man who had come from the poolroom and demanded the ax handle was Sam Bragg, the warden.

"Mr. Ives didn't hit him with the handle," Mr. Eliot said. "I saw the whole thing."

"Give that handle here," Sam Bragg repeated. "I'm a deputy sheriff as well as a game warden. You're under arrest, Ives."

"Get a doctor!" the heavy-set man bellowed. "Sig's bleedin'. Get a doctor!"

"I didn't touch him with the ax handle," Andy said desperately. "Here, look at my fist. That's what I used. He called me a—"

"Shut up!" the officer ordered. "Come with me, an' don't argue about it." He raised the flap of his shirt pocket and showed his star.

"Now, Mr. Bragg," said Mr. Eliot, "this is absurd! I tell you I saw the whole fracas, and I assure you that Mr. Ives—"

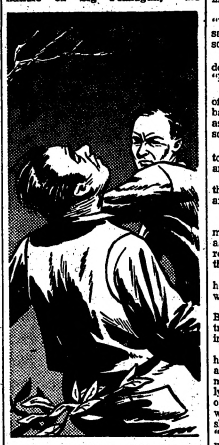
"Shaddap!" Mr. Bragg roared. "You're a harmless ol' coot, an' I'm not arrestin' you if you'll stop meddlin'. You can get on back to the swamp with the news that Ives is in jail, charged with disturbin' the peace an' attackin' a citizen with an ax handle!" Then he caught Andy's limp arm and said: "Come along. An' no tricks. I carry a gun."

"I'm a peaceful man," Andy said. "I'm not resisting the law."

Andy was in jail, and not in one of the best cells, either. It was dark and small and dirty and poorly ventilated. He sat on the bunk, elbows on knees, head in hands, and gave his predicament some thought. He must see Mr. Bird right away, and he must get word to Jerry Burke to come to the jail.

Having sold his fish with the greatest possible speed, Mr. Eliot presented himself at the office of Jerry Burke and found it closed. A whimsical sign on the door: "Out until noon, canvassing for the next county attorney."

He went then to the hardware store, where the clerk told him that Mr. Bird had already gone down to the jail. "If Ives did use that ax handle on Sig Flanagan," the clerk added with a grin, "it'll be a good ad for us—and a good thing for Sig!"



Andy swung again, wildly, fury unleashed, and all the strength that had come into him during the long, grueling days of swinging ax and pulling saw was behind the blow.

Mr. Bird was a citizen of influence. His appearance at the jail had both surprised and displeased the authorities. When Mr. Eliot arrived there, bail proceedings were moving along satisfactorily.

"You needn't wait for me," Andy told him. "I want to talk with the sheriff after I'm let out of this hole, and I've got to see Jerry."

"But it will be extremely unpleasant to go back without you," Mr. Eliot demurred. "In fact, I don't care to have to explain to your wife why you have been delayed."

"I'd rather you'd go ahead," Andy told him. "Just tell Kate that I'll be along after a while, and that this is nothing serious."

Mr. Eliot nodded, but he appeared doubtful. "I go," he agreed, "but under protest."

"And tell her," Andy said firmly, "that we'll go to church tomorrow, as planned. And tell Dave to cut enough short, strong posts to put up some wire around the potatoes. I'm borrowing an electric fence from Mr. Bird to protect the patch till something's done with the hogs."

Released on bail, Andy thanked Mr. Bird for his help and went to talk with the sheriff, whom he found at the courthouse.

Sheriff Martin viewed Andy with a stern eye. "Hello, Ives," he said tersely. "Looking for me?"

Andy nodded. "I'd like to see you privately."

Sheriff Martin Offers No Help

"My outer office is private enough. What is it?"

"You've heard of my trouble this morning," Andy began. "I just want to say that it was forced on me, and—"

"That will come out at the trial," the sheriff broke in. "I don't have time to discuss the case now."

"All right, but I tried to reason with Sig Flanagan about his hogs. You'd better talk to him before I have to start shooting hogs in my crop. And another thing, Flanagan won't be the kind to let a thing like this pass. I don't want any more trouble with him, and I won't have it unless he makes it."

"Mr. Flanagan is a citizen of this county," the sheriff said, pursing his weak, petulant mouth judicially. "He was attacked this morning by a man with an ax handle. It is my duty to see that justice—"

"I had a handle, but I didn't use it on him," Andy cut in. "And you've a duty toward me just as much as you have toward him. Tell Sig Flanagan to get his hogs where they won't bother me, and tell him to stay away from my place."

The sheriff shrugged. "Your land is surrounded by public land, state land, as much Sig Flanagan's as anyone's. It is not in my province to tell Mr. Flanagan to stay off it."

"I'm not telling him to stay off the state land," Andy pointed out. "I want him to stay off mine. Tell him—"

"Now, see here, Ives," the officer interrupted, "take some good advice: Go find a farm somewhere else. You'll never make a go of that place out there. You're not the type. I advise you to pull up and move."

"I'm staying," Andy told him. "I'm making a go of it, whether I'm the type or not. And if this is all the satisfaction I can get out of the high sheriff of this county, then good day, sir."

Sheriff Martin shrugged. "Good day, Ives," he said.

Andy left the sheriff's office wishing that he hadn't gone there.

Mr. Bird was ready to go to lunch. "You're coming home with me," he said. "Don't argue, now. We've some things to talk about."

"Well, I'm not bad about turning down a good meal," Andy told him. "Let's go."

Mrs. Bird was a motherly woman of about fifty. Their daughter, Barbara, was, Andy thought, as pretty as Hope. Maybe a little prettier to someone who wasn't prejudiced.

"We've heard of you," Mrs. Bird told Andy. "So glad you could come and eat with us."

"I hope you've heard a few good things," Andy said. "I'll need 'em after today!"

"Only good things," she said.

"Jerry thinks you Iveses are mighty nice people," Barbara said as they went to the table. "But he really doesn't think you fit in out there as well as some."

"We will, though," Andy assured her. "We'll trim our wants and ways till we do fit."

Mr. Bird chuckled. "Jerry and Barbara were talking last night of trying to get your daughter to come in and spend a week end with us."

"I wish she would," Andy told him. "Hope gets mighty lonesome at times." He looked at the girl, admiring her fine blue eyes, her shapely face that was so friendly and open. Back in his mind he wondered what there was, if more than friendship, between her and Jerry Burke. "You ask her sometime, won't you?"

"What I wanted to talk to you about," Mr. Bird changed the subject, "is this: Jerry and I are trying to get his uncle to come out for sheriff. That Martin ring has been in power long enough, and Mr. Burke is well-known and popular, and he could still supervise the operation of his lumber company."

"Politics again!" Mrs. Bird said to Barbara. "That's all we hear around here now!"

Bringing Things To a Boiling Point

"Now, dear, politics must go on," Mr. Bird said. "You see, Andy, the sheriff can't succeed himself, but his gang puts out a man to hold office during the off term; then Martin runs again, with everything set up and the machine as strong as ever. We want to break that. It's lasted twelve years now."

"It's time!" Andy exclaimed. "I believe Mr. Burke would get the homesteaders' votes."

"They work so hard too!" Barbara broke in. "Jerry has been canvassing all through there, and he says he has seen enough to make a book about modern pioneering. So few people know what they are really doing out in the swamp. He says it will be a garden spot someday."

"And a big factor in the life of our county," Mr. Bird added. "I'm for the homes and farms out there, more of them, and still more!"

"It's time we homesteaders got together," Andy said. "We've got the same problems, the same hopes—"

"Why, that's a fine idea!" Mr. Bird broke in. "You people need unity and a leader—and you're the man to lead them, Andy Ives."

Andy jerked in surprise. "Why, that's nice of you, but I don't think so. I'm new out there. Somebody else—"

"But you're levelheaded and cautious. You inspire confidence."

"And right now I'm fresh out of jail, awaiting trial!"

"You couldn't help what happened this morning," Mr. Bird said. "Every homesteader, plus a lot of Newcastle folks, will think a lot more of you for what you did."

Jerry drove Andy home at mid-afternoon. The battery and equipment for the electric fence were in the car. Jerry was angry over the morning's trouble, but he saw a good side to it.

"It'll bring things to a head, I believe," he said. "It'll help Unc' to decide to come out for sheriff. He told me awhile ago that he has it on good information that the sheriff put up the money for Sig to buy those hogs."

"Well, what do you know!" Andy said slowly. "No wonder I didn't have any luck talking with the sheriff about getting the hogs out of the swamp!"

Yeah, Which One?

An Englishman was on his first big-game hunting expedition. It was impressed upon him that he must never take a chance with a leopard, he must shoot instantly. Came the time when he did meet with a leopard. His guide shouted the reminder:

"Shoot him on the spot."

The Englishman, a little rattled, said:

"Be more specific, my man, which spot?"

CAN I USE RED STAR Special Active DRY YEAST IN MY OWN RECIPES?

CHRISTMAS STOLLEN
1 package Red Star Special Active Dry Yeast
¼ cup warm water
1 cup milk
⅜ teaspoon salt
⅓ cup sugar
3⅔ cups sifted flour (approximately)
⅓ cup shortening
½ cup seedless raisins
½ cup chopped dates
2 tablespoons shaved citron
½ cup sliced pecans
6 candied cherries, chopped
Dissolve dry yeast in warm water. Let stand. Scald milk. Add salt and sugar. Cool to lukewarm. Stir yeast solution thoroughly and add to milk mixture. Add half the flour and beat well. Stir in shortening. Add fruit and nuts and remainder of flour and mix to a smooth dough. Turn out on lightly floured board and knead. Shape into smooth ball and place in greased bowl. Brush top lightly with shortening. Cover and let rise in warm place for 45 minutes. Shape and place on greased baking sheet. Let rise in warm place for 45 minutes. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) for 40 minutes. Makes 2 stollens. Frost with plain icing and decorate.

THE FLOATING HAND AND THE GHOST LIGHT
A true experience of Mrs. Gertrude Baker on her 46-foot schooner, "Folly"
1 "We'd tied up at the yacht club for the night and turned in early—dead tired. Suddenly, I awoke—listened! Outside I heard a strangled groan! I got up ... slipped out. The dark deck was empty ... but at the rail, I saw a faint, green glow. I looked over the side and ...
2 "The ghastly glow in the water lighted a floating hand! A man—caught between our craft and the piling—his flashlight under water! I roped his wrist ... managed to hold his head above water ... screamed! Luckily — help came fast!
3 "We hauled him up and got him into the cabin. Lucky those batteries lasted! He said they'd been used a lot! Believe me — we know why 'Eveready' flashlight batteries are called the batteries with 'Nine Lives'!"
THE FLASHLIGHT BATTERY WITH "NINE LIVES"!

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Now Hospitals Are "Banks," Too!

Doc Simpson was saying, "Hospitals are building up 'bone banks' that work just like blood banks. When bone is needed, the surgeon takes one from a refrigerator, cuts it to the right shape and simply splices it in."

"You doctors are sure making progress," I says, "but tell me, are any of the patients fussy about whose bone they're getting?"

"No sir!" replies Doc. "No more than they worry about whose blood they get. No one yet asked for a bone from a man who went to the same school or church he did."

From where I sit, it would be a better world if we were half as willing to accept other people's ideas and tastes, as we seem to be willing to accept their bone and blood. There'll always be differences. Some like buttermilk, others would rather have a sparkling glass of temperate beer. But underneath we're pretty much the same—deserving each other's respect and tolerance!

A mother-daughter Christmas Party was held at the school house on Dec. 14th. An enjoyable evening was spent playing games and exchanging gifts. The climax if the evening was when the Hope Chest club served the mothers a beautiful candle light luncheon. Gladys Ness was toast-mistress and, Mrs. John Ness responded in behalf of the mothers.

Merle Melo of Newfolden operator of the Holt Theatre, announced today that he will close down the shows after Dec. 29th for the months of January and February due to uncertain weather and road conditions. The people in this area will look forward to the reopening as the shows have become a very popular entertainment for Thursday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Bratteli visited relatives at Grygla Sunda and also attended the Sunday school festival there.

Holiday Travel Caution Urged

"Don't let death take your holiday". This slogan of the National Safety Council is emphasized in a Christmas message to motorists from R. A. Hannah of Stillwater, chairman of the Minnesota Editors Safety Committee

"Every family looks forward to the joy and celebration that the holiday period should bring" said Mr. Hannah. "But every year accidents turn Christmas joy into anxiety, suffering and sorrow for hundreds of families in Minnesota.

"To keep death and injury from taking your holiday, or the holiday of your loved ones, is not just a matter of luck or fate. Holiday deaths and injuries can be avoided if drivers are aware of the extra holiday hazards, if they take it easy, and use courtesy, caution and common sense.

Refuse to drink if you are driving. Wait for the light to change. Be sure to stop at all Stop signs and signals. Control your speed so that you can stay on your side of the road and so that you can stop safely when necessary. Don't let your mind be distracted from the job of driving.

A reasonable amount of caution will go a long way toward keeping the lights reflecting happiness in your home at the coming Christmas holiday.

CENTENNIAL QUEEN X-RAYED

Minnesota's Centennial Queen, Mary Durey, smiles as she discovers how easy it is to have a chest X-ray. The picture above was snapped when she took her turn in the Mass X-Ray Survey in Brown county. More than half of Minnesota's counties have been reached by the Mobile X-Ray unit of the Minnesota Department of Health, and it is expected that by 1951 people in all counties will have had their chance to be X-rayed. Funds raised in the sale of Christmas Seals are paying a major part of the local costs of the X-ray surveys.

And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people.

For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior which, is Christ the Lord.

And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace good will toward men. Luke 2 10:14

MERRY CHRISTMAS

WHAT two words on human tongue are more heart-warming than those! They not only represent a friendly greeting, but in them are summed up the whole spirit of the Yuletide—brightness and laughter, joy of living and joy of giving, health and happiness, peace on earth and good will to all men.

It is a greeting which we will hear often in this community of ours during these happy days of the Christmas season. We will hear it on our streets, in our stores, along our country roads and in our homes. For ours is a friendly community and nowhere is that friendly greeting more sincere. It is not possible, however, for each of us to say "Merry Christmas!" to everyone and thus complete the happy circle of Yuletide good cheer.

But there is one who has that rare privilege, one who has been a welcome visitor at the firesides of the homes in this community throughout the year and who now claims the right to be the first to wish you joy at this joyous time. That one is your Home Paper.

So your Home Paper carries from you to all the community and from all the community to you this friendly greeting:

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

A-Bomb 'Powder' Declared Given To Russia in Lend-Lease Deals; Federal Tax Reforms Suggested

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MONUMENT TO PEACE . . . This new view of progress being made in construction of the United Nations world headquarters in New York City shows workmen carting their wheelbarrows of cement on the 39th floor, in the shadow of New York's tallest skyscraper, the Empire State building.

DEFENSE:

Skeletons Rattle

Skeletons of the Franklin D. Roosevelt "inner circle" were being rattled again. This time, it was Harry L. Hopkins, Roosevelt right-hand-man in the glittering days of the New Deal and the early war years, who was being resurrected in charges he gave U. S. atomic secrets to the Russians.

THE ACCUSER was G. Racey Jordan, a former army captain, who declared in a radio interview that big loads of what a Russian colonel called uranium and "bomb powder" were flown to Russia in 1944 under hurry-up instructions telephoned Jordan by the late Mr. Hopkins.

Ex-captain Jordan claimed possession of documentary proof, including a diary and copies which he said were of letters he wrote informing his superiors of these events.

U. S. officialdom who might have been concerned, or who were intimate with or associates of Hopkins and the "inner circle," were quick to brand Jordan's charges as "fantastic," a "cock-and-bull story," or to claim they had "heard nothing" about any such happenings.

JORDAN'S ACCOUNT described Hopkins as "the button the Russians touched every time they needed emergency help," and said Hopkins "was in the picture all the time."

Despite the overall denial in high places, a congressional probe group set to work to investigate the charges. Its action was directed by Chairman McMahon (D., Conn.) of the senate-house atomic committee.

TAXES:

Reform Urged

It wouldn't be all beer and skittles for Mr. Truman and his let's-increase-taxes adherents in the second session of the 81st congress.

As everyone will recall, Mr. Truman has indicated he will ask a multi-billion dollar tax hike in January, and he was bolstered in that position by a statement by John Snyder, treasury secretary, who also saw a need for more taxes.

HOWEVER, Senator O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) didn't share the views of these two gentlemen. Instead, the senator said publicly that any tax increase not only would be a mistake, but a "practical impossibility."

The senator, who heads the senate-house economic committee and might reasonably be presumed to know what he was talking about, told newsmen he thought the government could get more revenue by revising the tax system to give new incentives to business, rather than by raising taxes.

HE WILL SUGGEST, it was indicated, that wasteful spending in government be eliminated but not too sharply, and that no tax hike be made. Declaring the present tax system to be badly in need of reform, he said it should be revised to provide incentive for business expansion.

CZECH REDS:

Church War Looms

The smouldering row between church and state in Czechoslovakia threatened to erupt into open conflict as the nation's Roman Catholic bishops warned the Communist government that they could not submit to church control laws that destroy religious freedom.

The bishops even went so far as to suggest the possibility of a "religious fight" to protect their position.

Giveaways Going

Public apathy, according to current reports, appeared to be beating the federal courts to the punch in obliterating giveaway shows from the nation's radio networks.

Although proposed federal bans remained tied up in the courts, the public already had knocked off a number of jack-pot shows by the most effective means in radio—not tuning them in. Four such shows already had folded, one was on the way out, others were being revised.

The decline of the giveaway was attributed to the passing of a fad —a falling off in interest among radio listeners; but, whatever the reason, it is axiomatic in radio that a loss of audience is as fatal to a program as any federal edict could be.

HIGH COURT:

A State's Right

A state's right to enact laws forbidding use of force and violence to keep workmen from their jobs was upheld by the United States supreme court.

THE CASE came up on appeal from Arkansas where the C.I.O. had attacked enactment of such a law. The labor unions called it a violation of federal constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and assembly.

But the high court was not confused. The Arkansas law, it ruled, did nothing of the kind. It did not penalize any peaceful assembly at the site of a labor dispute, nor did it "infringe the right of expression of views in any labor dispute."

All it did, the court said, in effect, was to require that labor disputes proceed without the use of force or violence.

JOBS:

On Increase

The national labor picture was looking better than it had in months. In November job totals increased 517,000 and Commerce Secretary Charles Sawyer declared "the job picture in November was perhaps more favorable than at any previous time this year.

NON-FARM employment jumped 250,000 in November, reflecting the pickup in factory operations that had been slowed in October by the steel and coal strikes.

Farm employment itself scored a gain of 168,000 in November, a month when the number of workers usually declines.

It was estimated there were about 1.5 million persons with full-time (35 hours per week or more) employment who were on a part-time basis in the week of the November survey because of "slack work, material shortages, job turnover and similar factors."

UNDER the census bureau's statistical methods, anyone who has a regular job is counted as employed, even if he is not working at his job. Coal miners on strike, for instance, are counted as employed.

'Unveiling'

In Independence, Mo., a mysterious blaze 'unveiled' a gift by President Harry S. Truman to his home town. The gift was a statue of Andrew Jackson, and the unveiling had been set for a later date.

The statue, mounted in front of the courthouse, was concealed by a muslin covering. Somehow the muslin covering caught fire and burned completely away. Police indicated they suspected pranksters.

Generosity KNOWS NO SEASON

While giving is the paramount attribute of Christmas, as it is generally observed, records show that giving is not really confined to any one season of the year.

There are thousands of little acts of courtesy and greater acts of self-sacrifice and giving that punctuate the entire year.

For instance, there are the women who shared their ration coupons in the years before rationing was lifted in England . . . There's the quarter of a million Americans who contributed a penny each so that a tiny church in a Colorado community might have a church bell . . . The youngsters in Nunspeet, Holland, who shared the contents of their piggy bank with their financially embarrassed parents . . . The thoughtful transit company in Calgary that provides free rides for pensioners . . . The railway engineer who backed his locomotive many miles to rescue a motorist he had seen stranded in a blizzard.

The graciousness of giving really knows no season when the human heart is touched.

HARK, THE HERALD ANGELS . . . Another thing that we Americans have good reason to be thankful for is that our youngsters still can sing Christmas carols the way they want to without any dictatorial intervention. These angelic-looking choir boys were photographed at the Church of the Heavenly rest in New York as they held a dress rehearsal for the Christmas season.

Watch out for FIRE ON CHRISTMAS

The safest way to insure against fire at Christmas time which might originate from the Christmas tree is to keep the tree standing in plain, ordinary water from the time you get it home until you discard it after the holidays.

That's the most practical, satisfactory and convenient method found so far for reducing fire hazards and keeping tree needles from losing their color or dropping from the tree.

Tests show that keeping trees standing in water will prevent needles from dying out and becoming inflammable. They continue to appear fresh and green. As compared with tests of trees standing in fire-retardent chemicals, it was found that trees so treated did not absorb the chemicals rapidly or in as large amounts as water. This resulted in increased combustibility, needle discoloration and fall.

Here's how to carry out the tree treatment suggested:

Select a tree cut as recently as possible. Cut about an inch diagonally off the bottom of the trunk. Stand the tree at once in a container of water, and keep the water level above the edges of the cut during the entire time the tree is in the house. If the tree is not set up at once, keep it standing in water in a cool place.

This treatment does not make the tree absolutely flame-proof, so other cautions are necessary. Check the wiring of lights and keep tinsel and other flammable material and decorations away from the sockets of the light bulbs on the tree.

Educated Santas

School Teaches Kringle Know-How

A school for Santa Clauses?

Yes, there is one, it's the only educational institution of its kind in the world.

Graduates wear white wig and whiskers, red suit trimmed in white fur, wide white belt and black leather boots.

It is the Santa Claus School at Albion, New York. It gives credits for deep, jovial laughter and twinkling, smiling eyes.

Fresh out of Santa Claus school, a graduate with honors in throaty "ho-hoing" knows, among other things, how to remain calm when a kid glares and yells, "There ain't no Santa Claus," and how to maintain diplomatic relations with a parent who thinks Santa Claus has given her tot the brushoff.

The school holds that to be a good Santa Claus, one has to almost believe he really is Santa Claus.

The Santa Clauses are taught that when a fresh kid declares there isn't any Santa Claus to say: "I wouldn't be too sure of that, son—I wouldn't be too sure, if I were you."

Caroling Held Favorite With Many at Christmas

One of the favorite customs of Chirstmas Eve in many sections of the world is the singing of carols.

The carols are sometimes called "noels" because of the word having originated in France and descending from the Latin word meaning a "cry of joy at Christmas." Carols also once meant round dancers accompanied by gay songs. The earliest collection of carols was published about 1521.

The Yule Log

A medieval Christmas toast always accompanied the burning of the Yule log. It was:

"This Yule log burns. It destroys old hatreds and misunderstandings. Let your envies vanish and the spirit of good fellowship reign supreme for this season and all through the year."

But if you want a Yule log in the best Christmas tradition it should be of oak, ash, olive, apple or pine.

EPIPHANY EVE

Trees Bow in Adoration of Christ in Syria

"Among the most interesting legends connected with Christmas is one popular in Syria and is connected with Epiphany eve. According to this legend at twelve midnight on that night the trees bow in adoration before the Christ-child. The night, which the Syrians call "Laitat-al-Qadr" is held to be the "night of destiny." One writer from that country describes the belief thusly:

"But what was anything compared to the feast of Epiphany, which we celebrated in commemoration of the baptism of Jesus in the River Jordan 12 days after Christmas. I was taught to believe and joyously did believe that the rivers and fountains of the entire world became suddenly holy about sunset on Epiphany eve.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, work against odds to make a home on homesteading grounds donated by the state. When hogs from Sig Flanagan's property get into Andy's potatoes, the latter is infuriated and goes into town to complain. Flanagan becomes obstreperous and Andy strikes him. He is immediately arrested for having attacked a man with a lethal weapon, although the ax in his free hand did not enter into the fight. He is released on bail, but later when the homesteaders organize to run their own man against the town officers in a coming election, the sheriff and mayor send Andy his ax back with apologies, hoping to pacify the homesteaders.

CHAPTER XXVII

He rode to town with Mr. Eliot on Wednesday morning and went to see Mr. Bird.

"Sure, there's a trick in it," the merchant agreed. "The notes were sent within a few hours after Mr. Burke announced his candidacy. See? Sheriff Martin wants the votes out in your section. That's the trick!" He laughed. "This is that outfit's first opposition, and they're getting the jitters. You people out there talk up that organization, Ives. Keep right in behind it."

"We've got it started," Andy told him.

The homesteaders met at the church on Saturday morning of that week and organized.

Big and Andy and Jerry Burks talked to the people. It was Big who nominated Andy to head the homesteaders. There was much whispered conversation. Birdie nominated Harley Webster and sat down quickly, looking startled by her own courage. Harley begged in his raspy voice that the nomination be withdrawn. "Ives is a better man for the job," he said. Birdie tossed her head angrily. Mr. Wallace moved that the nominations be closed and that Andrew Ives be elected by "out-loud" vote.

After being chosen to head the homesteaders, Andy made a little talk and thanked them. "I'll do what I can," he said simply. "Let's all work together for the homes we want to have and the solid place we deserve in this country." It was a nice talk. They all applauded, and Kate felt like crying.

A sultry spell came on that afternoon, and a warm wind blew out of the south. It was still blowing on Sunday morning, and a hazy cloud had come up. The wind had become gusty by now, and warmer.

The Ives' rode to church in the wagon. Except for the threat of rain, they might have walked, but Andy said: "Mud's mud in this country. You won't ruin your shoes if we go in the wagon."

The cloud was heavier by the time they reached the church, and thunder muttered in the southwest.

Hope saw Big in the choir, heard his rich bass ring beneath Brother Cowann's voice. Birdie and Oreen were in the choir too. Birdie sang in a high, flutey quaver and swayed from the waist as she sang.

Mr. Flipp and Mr. Eliot were there. Knowing that the Ives' would attend, they had walked a short cut. Jessie Bell had followed. During a part of the song, she howled with lingering sadness, outquavering Birdie Webster.

The wind dropped away as Brother Cowann took his text. There was almost a constant rumble of thunder from the low bank of black cloud.

It was a fearful sermon against sin. Brother Cowann was in fine voice, and he bellowed his warnings to all. His eyes were often on Granny, who sat straight and followed him intently. When he turned on Mr. Eliot, that gentleman and scholar was watching him with a keen gaze and with undeniable amusement.

"Ye are sinners!" he bellowed. "Repent and be saved. If you have wronged your neighbor, make it right before it's too late. If you have lied, confess it and pray forgiveness. Oh, my beloved, REPENT! If you have slandered, REPENT!"

Lightning played over the cloud. A deep, ominous roar was back of the thunder.

People were watching the cloud. With such competition, Brother Cowann redoubled his efforts. The church was dark with a frightening midday twilight. People were growing restless. A man in the rear got up and slipped out on tiptoe.

Birdie Makes a Public Confession

Brother Cowann whirled to exhort those in the choir. Birdie Webster jerked in shock as he screamed at close range. She was wringing her handkerchief, taking quick glances out of the window now and then, when she thought the preacher wasn't looking at her.

The man who had gone outside yelled something. Brother Cowann faltered. The man came piling in, crying out: "It's a cyclone! It's comin' this-a-way. It's awful lookin'. Lord, save us!"

Brother Cowann turned around twice and grabbed up his coat. He started for the door. People were yelling and pushing to fight their way out. The more agile and resourceful ran over the benches, leaping from seat to seat. It would be an awful thing if the cyclone caught up the churchful of people!

"Oh, dear!" Kate wailed. "Andy—"

"Don't get trampled," Andy said calmly. "We'll just have to wait for the crowd to let us out."

"Let's use the window there," Granny said. "You can jump out and help us down, Andy."

"Stop shovin', 'fore I start kickin'!" Mr. Flipp roared from the other aisle.

Hope's heart was pounding so hard that it was almost choking her. The screams of the women and the yells of the men, and the frantic fighting for the outside were a background of sound and action to heighten her fear. A dry sob caught in her throat.

Someone took her arm. She looked around and saw Big Halleck. His face was white and drawn. He nodded reassuringly and said: "Hold onto me, Hope. When the wind hits, hold onto me."

She caught his hand, felt it close with gentle strength upon her. She said: "I've never been in a cyclone. What can we do?"

It seemed that she belonged with him in that moment, that it was a time she had awaited, not knowing it.

"Hope for the best is about all," he told her.

"Kate Ives!" a woman screamed shrilly. "Miz Ives!"

Kate turned and looked over her shoulder. She saw Birdie Webster fighting toward her. The woman looked like a ghost. She was crying, holding out her arms and screaming. A flash of lightning cut through the semidarkness and filled the church with a weird brilliance. Birdie Webster's eyes were wild with fear.

"I repent!" she screamed. "Kate an' Hope Ives, I repent! I lied about you, an' this is my public confession. I—"

"Birdie!" Harley yelled. He was trying to make his way to her. "'Reen!"

"Hope Ives!" Birdie cried, ignoring Harley. "I lied about you, may the Lord forgive me! I tol' people lies 'bout you an' Hank, an' I made up lies out of hate an' spite. I backbit you an' your ma, an' now I repent. Forgive me an' pray fer me!"

Big Continues His Coldness

"Ma!" Oreen cried. She was pulling at Birdie, trying to swing her around toward Harley. "Come on!"

"Wait!" Birdie screamed, snatching loose. "The Good Book says to go to them, ye have wronged, to go seventy times if you got to—or seventy times seventy if it takes that fer fergiveness. This evil thing is upon my heart, an' it must be lifted!"

Granny wheeled upon her. "Stop your ranting!" she ordered. "You're afraid of dying now. That's what ails you. You're a stormy weather Christian!"

Andy helped Kate and Granny from the window. Behind them, Birdie Webster was still pleading forgiveness, and Harley was trying to pull her toward the door. Oreen had left them and was lunging and elbowing her way through the congested doorway.

Big leaped from the window, caught Hope as she followed. They ran after the crowd. The little ditch was the only refuge in the flat land.

Hope stumbled. Big swept her up without losing speed and ran with her in his arms.

It was a wild, eerie scene of people in terror before threat of nature's fury. Young and old, and those in between, were reacting according to their bravery or their weakness. An old man with a flowing white beard ran toward the ditch waving his cane and babbling like a lunatic. Mrs. Buckley was running circles in the area before the church, her stiff, reddish hair flying, and calling for her husband, who was kneeling in the ditch and yelling: "Ida! Ida!" Brother Cowann was lying flat in the ditch and bellowing: "Be brave! Have courage, my beloved, an' pray!" And Mr. Eliot was standing on the church steps, his eyes on the black funnel, studying it critically.

Hope knew that Big Halleck was protecting her with his arms, shielding her with his body, and in spite of her fear she felt comfort in his nearness. She knew that Kate and Granny and Dave and Andy were close by them.

And then the darkness thickened, cut by knife-sharp lightning, and the blasting thunder was dim behind the roar of the wind. It came with a wild ripping and tearing of the trees, and the mad screaming of branches and whole trees whipped up by the torturing live thing that spiraled from earth to sky. It was a deafening, blotting-out moment, and human screams and wails were oddly dim and far away.

Hope huddled against Big Halleck and shared his strength. It seemed that she belonged with him in that moment, that it was a time she had awaited, not knowing it.

Then the rain. It came in whipping sheets. Cold and pounding and drenching. It beat into the faces of the people as they scrambled for the church building, making them gasp and cough. It came from all directions, for the wind was leaping from every way at once.

Big was still with Hope when they entered the church. She thanked him, saying: "I'd have been scared to death! I'm glad you wanted to watch out for me, Big."

He looked down at her, and the hardness that she had so often found in his blue eyes came into them again. "It wasn't anything," he told her. "You're welcome."

Hope caught his hand. "Why do you look like that?" It was a quick question from the heart, not from the mind. "If you're heard gossip about me, you know it was untrue, now. Why—?"

"I don't take stock in gossip," he said shortly. Then he went on into the gabbling crowd.

The rain was soon over, but the gusty wind held. The sky was rinsed free of clouds. The sun was hazed by dust and fine trash swept high into the air by the cyclone. It was cooler.

On the way home Andy and Dave had to clear the road of debris in several places. Twice they had to drive around, through the woods, to dodge upflung trees. Their misgivings were mounting fast, and they almost dreaded to come in sight of the house. Surely it had not withstood the wind!

"Couldn't have missed it far," Andy said. "It came from this way."

"What will we do if the house is gone?" Kate asked.

"Build another," said Granny.

"But our things will be gone too," Kate worried, "scattered through the woods!"

"Don't look for trouble until you come on it," Granny advised. She smiled at Hope, who had a far-off look in her eyes. "Well, it took a cycline to blow Big Halleck to you!" she said pleasantly.

Cleaning Up the Storm Debris

Hope winced. She was still thinking of how it had been after the storm. "He was nice," she said briefly.

Granny shook her head in despair.

They came around the last bend in the woods road, in sight of the house. It was still standing, but a treetop had smashed onto the new room, crushing the roof in.

"What next!" Andy groaned, clambering from the wagon. "It looks like there's no end to trouble."

"Well," Granny told him, "it didn't blow away."

There was a measure of comfort in this fact. Andy said slowly "Well, the wind couldn't hurt it without throwing something at it!"

He and Dave set to work that afternoon, sawing away the treetop, so that they could get at the job of removing broken rafters and cracked joists. Kate and Hope hung the drenched bedding and clothes outside to dry. They mopped the floor nearly dry and hoped they had removed the water before it had soaked in enough to warp and buckle the flooring.

Andy and Dave were busy with the roof the next morning when a car arrived. Andy went down the ladder to meet the slender, well-dressed caller. He thought there was something vaguely familiar about the man. Perhaps another candidate.

"Ah, Mr. Ives! Don't you remember me? David Wellons." He spoke in the same too-smoothly-pleasant way as of last fall, when Andy had not been sure whether he was overaffable or sarcastic. "You recall me, surely. How are you, sir? This is indeed pleasant!"

Andy said, "I remember you," and shook hands with the lawyer. "I ought to. You and some fellows got me out of bed mighty early one morning. Want a job? We had a little wind yesterday."

"So I heard, and I've been much concerned about you and your family." He smiled. "But I have a job, Mr. Ives.

Rice Diet

Rice, basic food for half of the world's population, has proved useful in other ways. In the Orient, clothing and shelter are manufactured from rice straw. It has been recently discovered that a rice diet, supplemented by other vitamins, seems to help 60 per cent of patients with high blood pressure and kidney diseases.

The Berries

The pie bakers of America annually use 7,300,000 pounds of strawberries, and 15,000,000 pounds of other berries such as blueberries and blackberries. The bakers also use more than 4,600,000 pounds of coconut and 34,000,000 pounds of cherries in pies each year.

Research Labs

Ohio has within its borders approximately 300 industrial research laboratories, employing more than 33,000 persons. Of these laboratories, 75 are in Cleveland, 34 in Cincinnati, 23 in Toledo, 19 in Columbus, and 17 each in Dayton and Akron.

Red Cedar

The western red cedar was a wood to worship among the Indians who had lived with it as children of nature along west coast waterways for scores of generations. They made marvelous use of cedar with primitive tools and methods of woodworking.

Skiing

Skiers who like to keep the runners of their skis "slick as glass" find it is literally possible now with a new patented invention that bonds a layer of fiber glass to the sliding surface of the ski.

Meaning of "Heifer"

Heifer is the modern spelling of two Anglo-Saxon words, heah-fear, meaning "high ox," as the heifer seems to stand up extraordinarily high on her legs compared to a grown cow.

Life Insurance Payments

Payments to living policy-holders by their life insurance companies were $1,790,000,000 in 1948, over 40 per cent more than five years before.

Cross-Eyes

The cross-eyed child has difficulty making the two eyes work together, so he turns one out of the way and uses the other. Virtually all cases can be corrected.

"Energy"

In 1899, coal furnished 89 per cent of all energy consumed in the United States. We now depend on oil and gas for over 40 per cent of our total energy.

Hard Wood

Hard wood resists peneration of nails and screws. But rubbing soap on the nails or screws eases the job and helps prevent the wood from splitting.

College Graduates

The proportion of the American population that graduated from college trebled between the two world wars, rising from 1.2 per cent to 3.6 per cent.

Milk from Cow

Milk production per cow varies from about 1000 quarts a year to nearly 20,000 quarts. The average is a little over 2300 quarts.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

Our sincere greetings to yon all to this time.

Mr. and Mrs. Hartley Peterson

This Christmas, let us give thanks to God, who guides our destiny, for the many blessings bestowed on America - free worship, free speech, free press, free ballot, free schools and free enterprise.

As we pay homage to the birth of Christ in our churches and in our homes, around the festive board and Christmas tree let us so value these privileges that we may ever be on the alert to defend our freedom against tyranny.

Let us by our actions and deeds give succor and courage to those less fortunate people who suffer from aggression and oppression.

Let us pray that America forever stand a Christian bulwark before all the world.

Mrs. W. C. Hauser of Waubin formerly Mrs. Emma Mattson, sends greetings to her friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wegge visited at the Walter Peterson home Wednesday evening.

Miss Eileen Larson, who is a student at the Lutheran Bible Institute at Minneapolis, is home for the holidays.

Guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Nohre on Tuesday evening were Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Horien and family, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nohre and family and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Wendt.

Reasons For Paint Failure

Too much oil causes paint to dry slowly, become dirty and fade. Too little oil causes it to wear off rapidly. Cracking is caused by hard, quick-drying paints. Wrinkles show up because of improper brushing of heavy, oily mixtures. Chalking usually comes about because too much thinner is used or by skimping on the number of coats.

Cleopatra's Needle

Cleopatra's Needle (the obelisk) in Central park, New York City, was a gift to this country from the Khedive of Egypt. William H. Vanderbilt footed the bill for getting it to New York, and the hieroglyphs were supposedly inscribed by the Egyptian who snatched Moses from the bullrushes.

Waldal-Larson Wedding

At a candlelight ceremony at Immanuel Lutheran church at Plummer on Wednesday evening December, 21, Beatrice Amanda Waldahl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Waldahl of Plummer became the bride of Clayton Marvin Larson, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Larson. The church was decorated with tall white candlebras and baskets of flowers. Rev. J. M. Runestad officiated at a double ring ceremony.

Mrs. Elbert Larvick of Red Lake Falls, played a program of Christmas music before the ceremony and the traditional weddidg marches. Miss Beverly Hanson of Middie River sang "O Holy Night" and "The Lord's Prayer". She was accompanied by Miss Adeline Lindahl at the piano.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attired in a gown of white satin and lace, with long pointed sleeves, a full tiered skirt and a high net yoke neckline. Her fingertip veil was held in place by a small beaded cap. Her only jewelry was a double strand of pearls, a gift of the groom. She carried a shower bouquet of red roses and white mums.

Attending the bride as matron of honor was her sister, Mrs. Walter Seeger, who wore a yellow moire taffeta gown fashioned with a whoop skirt and long pointed gauntletts. She wore a small flower hat and her jewelry consisted of a double strand of pearls, a gift of the bride. She carried a colonial bouquet of red roses and white mums. Little Kathleen Seeger was flower girl and wore a floor length gown identical to that of the matron of honor and carried a basket of flowers from which she dropped flowers in the path of the bride.

The bridesmaids, Eileen Larson, sister of the groom and Rosella Waldal, sister of the bride wore identical gowns of midnight blue taffeta fashioned with whoop skirts, long pointed gauntlets and small flower hats. They carried colonial bouquets of red roses and white mums. Their jewelry, a double strand of pearls, were gifts of the bride

The groom was attended by Walter Seeger as best man and by his brother Chester Larson and cousin. Orville Larson Ushers were Alvin Waldal and Lowell Larson. All gentlemen wore dark conventional suits and bouteniers of white mums.

The brides mother wore a gray dress with brown accessories while the grooms mother wore a black dress with black accessories. They wore corsages of roses and mums.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the church parlors for about 80 guests. Mrs. Lowell Larson of Thief River Falls had charge of the guestbook and waitresses were Evelyn Aune, Delores Kiel, and Delores Wahn all of Middle River.

Upon their return from a short honeymoon the newlyweds will make their home at Red Lake Falls.

Mexican Indian Dance

Totonacs, an ancient Indian nation of Mexico, left important contributions of the quaint lore of that country before their high degree of civilization passed into oblivion. Their pyramids and temples have almost disappeared under the Mexican jungle, but their death-defying dance, the Palo Volador, still thrills writers and explorers who visit these modern heirs of a great civilization.

Railroad Safety

During the year 1947 there were fewer fatalities on United States railroads than in any other year on record. The previous low in that respect was in 1939 when traffic, measured in ton-miles and passenger miles, was only one-half as great as in 1947. Nonfatal injuries, on the other hand, were considerably greater than the 1939 total, though not so numerous as in the war years, when freight and passenger traffic was at peak levels. Comparing 1947 with 1946, total fatalities to all classes of persons numbered 4,1[illegible], a reduction of 170 or 4.0 per cent under 1946. Nonfatal injuries numbered 48,750 in 1947, a reduction of 3,227 or [illegible] per cent under 1946.

Butcherbird

The North American shrike, commonly known as the butcherbird, gets its nickname for the unusual manner in which it kills its prey. A shrike captures small birds, mice, and grasshoppers in its strong beak and then forces them onto thorns, fence barbs, or broken twigs, in the same manner a butcher hangs meat on hooks.

What Is Color?

So far as is known, nothing on earth has color in or of itself. Light is the source of color. Color is a sensation produced by the action of visible rays upon the retina of the human eye—it is an impression taken into the mind through the sense of sight, responding to the wave lengths of light.

Origin of "Mahogany"

The origin of the word, "mahogany," is obscure. It is probably an English version of the name used by African slaves in Jamaica, when the English took the island from Spain in 1655. The Spanish word, "caoba," is the earliest name for mahogany.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Supreme Court Decision Declares 'Home Rule' Rent Controls Valid; Five Million Receiving Public Aid

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

RENT CURBS:
Home Rule Okayed

The 'home rule' rent control law—which allows states and cities to decontrol their own areas — was upheld by the U. S. supreme court in almost record time. The court's ruling came in less than a week after oral arguments were heard.

THE LAW was enacted last summer by congress and is due to expire June 30, 1950. It had lost in its first federal court test when a U. S. district judge declared it unconstitutional because it delegated powers of congress to the states and local governing bodies.

Tighe Wood and the justice department by-passed intermediate courts and appealed the finding directly to the high court.

While there had been no general statements to the effect, there was a widespread impression that many states and local areas had withheld decontrol action because of the pending suit.

IN ONE INSTANCE, a Kentucky county area had restored rent curbs after lifting them had resulted in what was termed "unreasonable" rent increases.

However short private building had fallen of its goals, there was no argument that the housing shortage had eased somewhat and it appeared that congress might find it relatively easy to abandon all rent curbs when the present "home rule" act expires.

But in view of what had happened in some isolated areas in rental charges, congress might leave the way open for restoration of controls wherever landlords displayed a tendency to gouge tenants.

PUBLIC AID:
Cost Enormous

In a country as powerful and prosperous as the United States it seemed an ironical paradox, but the record showed it to be true—more than five million Americans were receiving public assistance of some form or other, and at a cost of two billion dollars a year to the taxpayers.

JOHN L. THURSTON, acting security administrator, cited those figures at the opening of a 10-day congressional inquiry into the problems of the nation's low-income families. Thurston explained that the federal government provides about half of the two billion dollar annual outlay for public aid, with the other half coming from state and local community funds.

Thurston, himself, saw the contradiction in the situation as he indicated when he said:

"This seems to some people an astonishing phenomenon, considering the fact that we have had full, or practically full, employment for the past seven or eight years."

HE SOUGHT to clarify the situation, however, when he added:

"It is not at all astonishing, however, in relation to the large number of families with no earner, or a low-income earner, and in view of inadequacies of our social insurance program."

Then Thurston used the occasion to get in a few licks for President Truman's "Fair Deal" program, contending that its enactment would help provide "better living" for low-income families.

WAR VETS:
More Benefits

Slated for delivery after January 1 were increases in benefits for disabled U.S. war veterans, dependents and widows. The veterans administration reported that checks of some two million recipients were about to be increased.

THE LARGEST GROUPS to receive increases, the V.A. said, included nearly two million veterans with service-connected disabilities from 10 to 100 per cent.

This group includes World War I and II veterans disabled in service and other veterans disabled in peacetime service since July 15, 1903.

The old rates of payment range from $13.80 to $138 a month for war service, and from $11.04 to $110.40 for peacetime service.

THE NEW RATES are 8.7 per cent higher—respectively, $15 to $150 and $12 to $120.

About 58,000 widows receiving compensation because of the service-connected death of a veteran and who have one or more children also will get increases.

Off to Prison

Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, sentenced to 6 to 18 months in prison and fined $10,000 for salary kick-backs in his congressional office, is shown as he started for the Danbury, Conn., federal prison to begin serving sentence.

ECONOMY:
Over a Barrel

More than 500 national leaders, talking of the need of economy in operation of the federal government, may have felt themselves more over the barrel than around it when they met for a "cracker barrel" discussion of the problem.

It was a real cracker barrel, bearing the legend "citizens' committee for the Hoover report," set up amid the handsome appointments of Washington's Shoreham hotel.

DELEGATES HEARD Herbert Hoover, chairman of the committee appointed to study means of streamlining the government, praise the accomplishments of his commission and of the committee now seeking to get the commission's proposals adopted.

After pointing out the federal expenditure of more than 43 billion dollars and a deficit of more than five billion have been announced for the current fiscal year, he declared:

"I believe it may be much greater in the next fiscal year. We may be turning two Frankensteins loose in the land. Their terrifying names are 'higher taxes' and 'inflation.'"

HOOVER POINTED OUT that six months have passed since the commission he headed finished its reports on congress, and on economics and improvements in the executive branch, and, in the meantime, the "recommendations have had a magnificent support by the press and public."

All of which was true. The rub seemed to be in getting congress and the President to go all the way suggested by the Hoover commission in effecting more government economy and efficiency.

LABORITES:
Ousted by Aussies

For the second time within 11 days proponents of socialism in the British commonwealth had been ousted by the voters. Advocates of free enterprise threw out Australia's Labor government, an action which paralleled the election verdict in New Zealand.

WERE THESE IMPORTANT portents or did they signify nothing? If one chose to place the events alongside the current difficulties experienced by the British Labor government, and attempt to evaluate them correctly, the answer would be that socialism appeared to be on its way out in the British commonwealth.

On the other hand, the foes of the free enterprise system everywhere, would doggedly stand on Labor's claimed progress over the years, and attempt to take the stand that those voting out were doing so simply because they did not know what was best for themselves.

ROBERT GORDON MENZIES, Australian Liberal leader who will now be restored to the prime ministry he held from 1939 to 1941, called the turn in an earlier comment on the Australian situation:

"The Socialists were brought to power in New Zealand, Australia and Great Britain in that order. The dramatic (New Zealand) result seems a happy omen that they will go out in the same order."

JOBLESS BENEFITS
Security Payments Continue to Increase

Officials in the federal labor department's bureau of employment security were expressing concern over the increase in the number of U. S. citizens exhausing their jobless benefit rights.

According to latest figures in the department, more than a half-million ran out of their rights to further employment compensation payments during the July-September quarterly period. There were persons who still didn't have jobs after running through all the unemployment insurance payments to which they were entitled. The number of benefit weeks varies from state to state.

The puzzling factor was that these exhaustions came at a time of high employment, and give an idea of future problems.

Holiday Fetes Basically Same

Food, Visits Common Mark of New Year

While New Year celebrations in all countries are basically similar, there are many interesting variations and special features. For example, the King's honor list provides great interest and excitement in England.

In France and Germany, the holiday is marked by festivities resembling those in the United States, and the great cities, such as Paris, take on a carnival atmosphere on New Year's Eve.

Poland, Lithuania, and Czechoslovakia observe New Year with a round of calls by the people, and with official receptions. In these countries, tables are piled high with food and drink and vast quantities of both are consumed on the eve of the new year as well as on New Year's Day. Gifts, too, are exchanged.

A gold coin is baked in a cake by New Year's celebrants in Greece. On New Year's morning the cake is cut into as many slices as there are members of the family, and the one receiving the coin is considered to have much good luck in store for him.

Huge bonfires are built by peasants of Bulgaria as a New Year's greeting to their friends in near-by villages. It is on this day also that Bulgarians announce army promotions. Carol singing is an important feature of the Bulgarian celebrations.

In Sweden, one form of observance is that of high officials inscribing their names in a huge book at the palace of the king. This appears to be in lieu of an official reception. In this northern land it is the custom also to drive to church in sleighs early on New Year's morning. Torches are carried to light the way.

Scotch Unrestrained In New Year's Joy

The Scotch, who react with restrained enthusiasm to Christmas, welcome the New Year with all the joy and merry-making possible to their usually tacitturn nature.

On New Year's Eve the wassail bowl goes round and round, filled with savory liquid, nostalgically fragrant.

Apples floating atop the wassail bowl stir memories of the "apple-howling" when boys switched the trunks of fruit trees petitioning a "good howling crop."

Somehow the "lamb's wool," as the decoration of the wassail bowl often is called, seems reminiscent of young folks rushing to the nearest spring at the stroke of 12 to drink the "cream of the well" because the first to do so could expect good luck for the ensuing year.

Handsel Monday—the Monday after New Year's Day—is traditionally the "big day" for Scotch boys and girls.

CLOCK WATCHER . . . This is a typical Hollywood conception of what the New Year is like, but it probably won't make much difference to you in your celebration. And if you can't think of anything good about 1949, just remember that without it we wouldn't be having 1950.

Feasting Holds Important Place In Holiday Rites

Since both at home and abroad feasting is so much a part of the New Year observance, it is interesting to know something of the gastronomic trail of the seasonal dinners. For instance, the American in England on New Year's Day would find the chief dish a reminder of home, for it would be turkey, duck or goose. The chief difference would be the plum pudding.

THAT Lucky NEW YEAR

Omens of good and bad luck always have been associated with the New Year, all founded more or less on the supposition that supreme power was vested in an unseen deity who could bring good luck if properly appeased, and mete out punishments if offended.

Among the old superstitions are many quaint customs that have been observed for centuries and have come down almost to this day and age. They include:

To bring good luck, one must wear something new on the first day of the year. This is an old English belief.

In some parts of England and Scotland it is believed to be unlucky to leave the house on New Year's Day until some outsider has entered in.

There is also an old superstition concerning the weather told in an old legend as follows:

"If New Year night wind bloweth south,
It betokeneth warmth and growth;
If west, much milk, and fish in sea;
If north, much cold and storms there'll be;
If east, the tree will bear much fruit.
If northeast, flee it, man and brute."

It was considered unlucky also for one to make a present on New Year's until one had first been received.

Nations Have Own New Year Customs

Almost every nation on earth has welcomed the New Year with some form of ceremony, not, however, on the same date or in the same way.

The Druids celebrated the New Year on the shortest day of the year, the time, in their belief, when the sun which had turned away in winter then turned homeward, bringing with it light, warmth and good cheer.

The superstitions that cluster around the day began way back in the time of these sun worshippers, when the priests led the people to the forests of the gods for small sprigs of mistletoe which would bring them health and prosperity for the year.

So important was the event the people marched in processions to the groves, led by the priests, and there the mistletoe was cut with sickles of gold.

U.S. Has Always Hailed New Year

New Year's Day always has been actively celebrated in the United States, and from Colonial times to the present it has been a day of great significance.

The Presidents have received the public at great receptions on that day, and the custom of visiting friends and relatives is one which has survived until the present.

In the "gay nineties" this visiting back and forth attained a tremendous vogue and the young blades of the city and town looked forward to the event with the keenest anticipation.

Still New Years' Day seems to be growing even more in popularity and the average American feels "lost" unless he has some plans to "go somewhere" and "do something" on New Year's Eve.

Two-Faced Janus

The name January is derived from the two-faced god, January.

In mythology he was originally the god of light and day, but he gradually became regarded as the god of the beginning of things.

The beginning of the year was sacred to Janus and a festival in his honor, called Aginia, was celebrated. At the beginning of any important undertaking his advice and assistance were sought.

Lincoln Held Significant Reception On New Year's

One of the most significant New Year's receptions ever to take place at the White House was held by President Lincoln in 1863. It was at noon, January 1, that secretary of state Seward carried the emancipation proclamation to the President for his signature.

"I have been shaking hands since 9 o'clock this morning and my right hand is almost paralyzed," the President said to Seward.

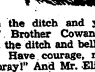
No Land is Free
By W. T. PERSON



The Ives family, Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, work against odds to make a home on homesteading grounds donated by the state. When hogs from Big Flanagan's property get into Andy's potatoes, the latter is infuriated and goes into town to complain. Flanagan becomes obstreperous and Andy strikes him. He is immediately arrested for having attacked a man with a lethal weapon, although the ax in his free hand did not enter into the fight. He is released on bail, but later when the homesteaders organize to run their own man against the town officers in a coming election, the sheriff and mayor send Andy his ax back with apologies, hoping to pacify the homesteaders.

CHAPTER XXVII

He rode to town with Mr. Eliot on Wednesday morning and went to see Mr. Bird.

"Sure, there's a trick in it," the merchant agreed. "The notes were sent within a few hours after Mr. Burke announced his candidacy. See? Sheriff Martin wants the votes out in your section. That's the trick!" He laughed. "This is that outfit's first opposition, and they're getting the jitters. You people out there talk up that organization, Ives. Keep right in behind it."

"We've got it started," Andy told him.

The homesteaders met at the church on Saturday morning of that week and organized.

Big and Andy and Jerry Burka talked to the people. It was Big who nominated Andy to head the homesteaders. There was much whispered conversation. Birdie nominated Harley Webster and sat down quickly, looking startled by her own courage. Harley begged in his raspy voice that the nomination be withdrawn. "Ives is a better man for the job," he said. Birdie tossed her head angrily. Mr. Wallace moved that the nominations be closed and that Andrew Ives be elected by "out-loud" vote.

After being chosen to head the homesteaders, Andy made a little talk and thanked them. "I'll do what I can," he said simply. "Let's all work together for the homes we want to have and the solid place we deserve in this country." It was a nice talk. They all applauded, and Kate felt like crying.

A sultry spell came on that afternoon, and a warm wind blew out of the south. It was still blowing on Sunday morning, and a hazy cloud had come up. The wind had become gusty by now, and warmer.

The Ives' rode to church in the wagon. Except for the threat of rain, they might have walked, but Andy said: "Mud's mud in this country. You won't ruin your shoes if we go in the wagon."

The cloud was heavier by the time they reached the church, and thunder muttered in the southwest.

Hope saw Big in the choir, heard his rich bass ring beneath Brother Cowann's voice. Birdie and Oreen were in the choir too. Birdie sang in a high, flutey quaver and swayed from the waist as she sang.

Mr. Flipp and Mr. Eliot were there. Knowing that the Ives' would attend, they had walked a short cut. Jessie Bell had followed. During a part of the song, she howled with lingering sadness, outquavering Birdie Webster.

The wind dropped away as Brother Cowann took his text. There was almost a constant rumble of thunder from the low bank of black cloud.

It was a fearful sermon against sin. Brother Cowann was in fine voice, and he bellowed his warnings to all. His eyes were often on Granny, who sat straight and followed him intently. When he turned on Mr. Eliot, that gentleman and scholar was watching him with a keen gaze and with undeniable amusement.

"Ye are sinners!" he bellowed. "Repent and be saved. If you have wronged your neighbor, make it right before it's too late. If you have lied, confess it and pray forgiveness. Oh, my beloved, REPENT! If you have slandered, REPENT!"

Lightning played over the cloud. A deep, ominous roar was back of the thunder.

People were watching the cloud. With such competition, Brother Cowann redoubled his efforts. The church was dark with a frightening midday twilight. People were growing restless. A man in the rear got up and slipped out on tiptoe.

Birdie Makes a Public Confession

Brother Cowann whirled to exhort those in the choir. Birdie Webster jerked in shock as he screamed at close range. She was wringing her handkerchief, taking quick glances out of the window now and then, when she thought the preacher wasn't looking at her.

The man who had gone outside yelled something. Brother Cowann faltered. The man came piling in, crying out: "It's a cyclone! It's comin' this-a-way. It's awful lookin'. Lord, save us!"

Brother Cowann turned around twice and grabbed up his coat. He started for the door. People were yelling and pushing to fight their way out. The more agile and resourceful ran over the benches, leaping from seat to seat. It would be an awful thing if the cyclone caught up the churchful of people!

"Oh, dear!" Kate wailed. "Andy—"

"Don't get trampled," Andy said calmly. "We'll just have to wait for the crowd to let us out."

"Let's use the window there," Granny said. "You can jump out and help us down, Andy."

"Stop shovin', 'fore I start kickin'!" Mr. Flipp roared from the other aisle.

Hope's heart was pounding so hard that it was almost choking her. The screams of the women and the yells of the men, and the frantic fighting for the outside were a background of sound and action to heighten her fear. A dry sob caught in her throat.

Someone took her arm. She looked around and saw Big Halleck. His face was white and drawn. He nodded reassuringly and said: "Hold onto me, Hope. When the wind hits, hold onto me."

She caught his hand, felt it close with gentle strength upon her. She said: "I've never been in a cyclone. What can we do?"

It seemed that she belonged with him in that moment, that it was a time she had awaited, not knowing it.

"Hope for the best is about all," he told her.

"Kate Ives!" a woman screamed shrilly. "Miz Ives!"

Kate turned and looked over her shoulder. She saw Birdie Webster fighting toward her. The woman looked like a ghost. She was crying, holding out her arms and screaming. A flash of lightning cut through the semidarkness and filled the church with a weird brilliance. Birdie Webster's eyes were wild with fear.

"I repent!" she screamed. "Kate an' Hope Ives, I repent! I lied about you, an' this is my public confession. I—"

"Birdie!" Harley yelled. He was trying to make his way to her. "'Reen!"

"Hope Ives!" Birdie cried, ignoring Harley. "I lied about you, may the Lord forgive me! I tol' people lies 'bout you an' Hank, an' I made up lies out of hate an' spite. I backbit you an' your ma, an' now I repent. Forgive me an' pray fer me!"

Big Continues His Coldness

"Ma!" Oreen cried. She was pulling at Birdie, trying to swing her around toward Harley. "Come on!"

"Wait!" Birdie screamed, snatching loose. "The Good Book says to go to them, ye have wronged, to go seventy times if you got to—or seventy times seventy if it takes that fer fergiveness. This evil thing is upon my heart, an' it must be lifted!"

Granny wheeled upon her. "Stop your ranting!" she ordered. "You're afraid of dying now. That's what ails you. You're a stormy weather Christian!"

Andy helped Kate and Granny from the window. Behind them, Birdie Webster was still pleading forgiveness, and Harley was trying to pull her toward the door. Oreen had left them and was lunging and elbowing her way through the congested doorway.

Big leaped from the window, caught Hope as she followed. They ran after the crowd. The little ditch was the only refuge in the flat land.

Hope stumbled. Big swept her up without losing speed and ran with her in his arms.

It was a wild, eerie scene of people in terror before threat of nature's fury. Young and old, and those in between, were reacting according to their bravery or their weakness. An old man with a flowing white beard ran toward the ditch waving his cane and babbling like a lunatic. Mrs. Buckley was running circles in the area before the church, her stiff, reddish hair flying, and calling for her husband, who was kneeling in the ditch and yelling: "Ida! Ida!" Brother Cowann was lying flat in the ditch and bellowing: "Be brave! Have courage, my beloved, an' pray!" And Mr. Eliot was standing on the church steps, his eyes on the black funnel, studying it critically.

Hope knew that Big Halleck was protecting her with his arms, shielding her with his body, and in spite of her fear she felt comfort in his nearness. She knew that Kate and Granny and Dave and Andy were close by them.

And then the darkness thickened, cut by knife-sharp lightning, and the blasting thunder was dim behind the roar of the wind. It came with a wild ripping and tearing of the trees, and the mad screaming of branches and whole trees whipped up by the torturing live thing that spiraled from earth to sky. It was a deafening, blotting-out moment, and human screams and wails were oddly dim and far away.

Hope huddled against Big Halleck and shared his strength. It seemed that she belonged with him in that moment, that it was a time she had awaited, not knowing it.

Then the rain. It came in whipping sheets. Cold and pounding and drenching. It beat into the faces of the people as they scrambled for the church building, making them gasp and cough. It came from all directions, for the wind was leaping from every way at once.

Big was still with Hope when they entered the church. She thanked him, saying: "I'd have been scared to death! I'm glad you wanted to watch out for me, Big."

He looked down at her, and the hardness that she had so often found in his blue eyes came into them again. "It wasn't anything," he told her. "You're welcome."

Hope caught his hand. "Why do you look like that?" It was a quick question from the heart, not from the mind. "If you're heard gossip about me, you know it was untrue, now. Why—?"

"I don't take stock in gossip," he said shortly. Then he went on into the gabbling crowd.

The rain was soon over, but the gusty wind held. The sky was rinsed free of clouds. The sun was hazed by dust and fine trash swept high into the air by the cyclone. It was cooler.

On the way home Andy and Dave had to clear the road of debris in several places. Twice they had to drive around, through the woods, to dodge upflung trees. Their misgivings were mounting fast, and they almost dreaded to come in sight of the house. Surely it had not withstood the wind!

"Couldn't have missed it far," Andy said. "It came from this way."

"What will we do if the house is gone?" Kate asked.

"Build another," said Granny.

"But our things will be gone too," Kate worried, "scattered through the woods!"

"Don't look for trouble until you come on it," Granny advised. She smiled at Hope, who had a far-off look in her eyes. "Well, it took a cycline to blow Big Halleck to you!" she said pleasantly.

Cleaning Up the Storm Debris

Hope winced. She was still thinking of how it had been after the storm. "He was nice," she said briefly.

Granny shook her head in despair.

They came around the last bend in the woods road, in sight of the house. It was still standing, but a treetop had smashed onto the new room, crushing the roof in.

"What next!" Andy groaned, clambering from the wagon. "It looks like there's no end to trouble."

There was a measure of comfort in this fact. Andy said slowly "Well, the wind couldn't hurt it without throwing something at it!"

He and Dave set to work that afternoon, sawing away the treetop, so that they could get at the job of removing broken rafters and cracked joists. Kate and Hope hung the drenched bedding and clothes outside to dry. They mopped the floor nearly dry and hoped they had removed the water before it had soaked in enough to warp and buckle the flooring.

Andy and Dave were busy with the roof the next morning when a car arrived. Andy went down the ladder to meet the slender, well-dressed caller. He thought there was something vaguely familiar about the man. Perhaps another candidate.

"Ah, Mr. Ives! Don't you remember me? David Wellons." He spoke in the same too-smoothly-pleasant way as of last fall, when Andy had not been sure whether he was overaffable or sarcastic. "You recall me, surely. How are you, sir? This is indeed pleasant!"

Andy said, "I remember you," and shook hands with the lawyer. "I ought to. You and some fellows got me out of bed mighty early one morning. Want a job? We had a little wind yesterday."

"So I heard, and I've been much concerned about you and your family." He smiled. "But I have a job, Mr. Ives."

Finishing An Attic

QUESTION: We are considering finishing off our attic. In each end we placed louvres for cross-ventilation. These were put in to help prevent the formation of condensation on the roof sheathing. Should these be closed up before finishing the walls? We intend to insulate the roof.

ANSWER: Instead of closing up the louvres permanently, have them fitted with doors which can be opened and closed by means of a long cord, and a catch for easy opening and closing. In this way you can have the benefit of the ventilation in the summertime, and can close the louvres whenever you wish.

NEW RELIEF! For Stuffiness, Coughs of Colds

You know — like millions of others — how wonderfully effective Vicks VapoRub is when you rub it on.

Now...here's amazing, special relief when there's much coughing or stuffiness, that "choked-up" feeling. It's VapoRub in Steam . . . and it brings relief almost instantly!

Put 1 or 2 spoonfuls of VapoRub in a vaporizer or bowl of boiling water. Then — breathe in the soothing, medicated vapors. Every breath eases coughing spasms, makes breathing easier. And to prolong relief—rub VapoRub on throat, chest and back.

Use it in steam . . . Rub it on, too! VICKS VAPORUB

"TEAMWORK PAYS IN MARKETING, TOO"...

—says A. E. DOLLERSCHELL, Forest City, Minn., Dairyman

Mr. Dollerschell's a patron of the Forest City Cooperative Creamery Co., which markets through LAND O'LAKES. "That way," he says, "we get the benefit of teamwork in processing, distributing and selling our dairy products. We share in the savings made possible by co-operation. And we know that through our own organization, LAND O'LAKES, we always get fair treatment." If you milk cows or raise poultry, why don't you market the LAND O'LAKES way? As farmers testify, it pays.

A Tonic For The Missus

The missus came marching in with a new hat yesterday. She was as happy as a circus poster.

I've learned one thing about the hats she buys. A hat is a tonic to her. If she's feeling blue, nothing gives her a lift like a new hat. Now, I could trade in my old grey fedora without raising my blood pressure a notch. But I'll admit that more than once I've bought a new briar pipe I didn't need—just because life was getting a little bit monotonous.

With Buck Howell it's something else again. When Buck is feeling low, he gets over it by blowing on a broken-down clarinet he hasn't mastered in twenty years.

From where I sit, different people are always going to respond to different things in different ways. So let's keep a friendly understanding of what other folks get out of a new hat, an old clarinet, a chocolate soda or a temperate glass of sparkling beer or ale now and then.

Mar. Co. Tax Rate Reduced

Marshall county tax payers will receive a welcome gift during 1950 from the county government with a reduction of $48,270.04 in the new county tax levy which is due for collection during the coming year, according to Levi G. Johnson, county auditor.

The reduction in tax levy carries with it a reduction in the county tax rate of 10.97 mills or from 67.27 mills in 1949 to 56.3 mills for 1950. The total levy for 1950 is $338,156.44 in comparison to $383,426.48 this past year.

Residents in the common school districts which do not maintain high schools, will pay an additional levy of 10 1 mills for tuition which in not levied in the Independent districts maintaining high schools. For these common school districts the rate will be 66.4 mills. Last year the tuition levy was 7.9 mills on the common school districts. The tuition tax is figured in the school district tax rates. — Warren Sheaf.

Conservation Essay Contest

The Seventh Annual Conservation Essay Contest, sponsored by the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs with the Department of Conservation cooperating, will open January 9th and continue to April 7, it was announced today by Mrs. S. J. Nicholas of Minneapolis, president of the federation. The title of this year's contest is "International Wilderness Peace Memorial Forest." Mrs. E. R. Starkweather of Hackensack is conservation chairman of the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs.

The contest is open to high school students of Grades 9 through 12. More than 300 high schools throughout the state are expected to enter papers in the contest. A boy and girl winner will be selected in each of the ten Federation of Women's Clubs Districts and one of these will be chosen for top honors. The twenty bobs and girls will be rewarded with a week's vacation at Douglas Lodge, Itasca State Park, with all expenses paid.

Mrs. Nicholas said that the contest has been approved by the Contest Committee of Minnesota Secondary Principals. There is an unlimited amount of reference material on the Quetico-Superior Wilderness Area available to competing schools and student. These aids were contributed by various interested organizations including the Izaak Walton League of America. Sigurd Olson of Ely, consultant to the Wilderness Committee of the I.W.L.A., has devoted much time to the project of saving the Wilderness area from encroachment by heavy airplane travel.

Mrs. Fred Petersons Brother-in-Law Dies Accidently

Funeral services were conducted from the Gethsemane Lutheran church of St. Paul on Tuesday afternoon for George Saurbrey of St. Paul. Interment was made in the Union cemetery, St. Paul.

Carbon monoxide poisoning caused his death. He was found dead in his parked car Saturday morning Dec. 24. Examination showed death due to exhaust fumes rather than heart attack as was originally believed.

George Saurbrey was married to Miss Selma Saastad, a former Holt girl, April 1940, who survives him, together with a son Robert, and several brothers and sisters.

Lonely Isles

The remote British islands of Tristan da Cunha, in the far South Atlantic, are known as the "lonely isles." World War I was nearly over before news of its outbreak reached inhabitants of these islands. Years passed before the islanders heard of the armistice. By contrast, it was through World War II that Tristan da Cunha began losing its isolation. In 1942, a secret meteorlogical and radio station was set up there by the British royal navy and the South African air force.

Obituary of Mrs. Nyberg

Mrs. Karen Nyberg, having attained the age of 88 years, passed away Friday at a Thief River Falls hospital. Rev. J. O. Jacobsen of Thief River Falls and Rev. T. Myhrer of Newfolden jointly conducted final rites in the Evangelical Free church at Thief River Falls Tuesday afternoon, and the body was laid to rest in the Ridge cemetery at Holt.

Left to mourn are a daughter, Mrs. Hilma Johnson of Holt; three sons, Carl, Dick, and Martin of Thief River Falls; a sister Mrs. Thea Brunsvold of Hanlontown, nine grandchildern and two great grandchildren. Her parents three daughters, and four sons preceded her in death.

The deceased was born in Varmland, Sweden, June 17, 1861, and was married in that country to Erick Nybeib.

They came to this country in 1889, establishing their residence in Cokato, and in 1891 to East Valley township, Marshall county, where they homesteaded and farmed until 1904, moving at that time to Holt township, Marshall county. In 1923 Mrs. Nyberg moved to Thief River Falls, where she has since made her home.

Butcherbird

The North American shrike, commonly known as the butcherbird, gets its nickname for the unusual manner in which it kills its prey. A shrike captures small birds, mice, and grasshoppers in its strong beak and then forces them onto thorns, fence barbs, or broken twigs, in the same manner a butcher hangs meat on hooks.

What Is Color?

So far as is known, nothing on earth has color in or of itself. Light is the source of color. Color is a sensation produced by the action of visible rays upon the retina of the human eye—it is an impression taken into the mind through the sense of sight, responding to the wave lengths of light.

Origin of "Mahogany"

The origin of the word, "mahogany," is obscure. It is probably an English version of the name used by African slaves in Jamaica, when the English took the island from Spain in 1655. The Spanish word, "caoba," is the earliest name for mahogany.

Early "Comic Strip"

Perhaps the most famous "comic strip" of the Middle Ages is the Bayeux tapestry. In needlework of eight colors, 20 inches wide and 231 feet long, it records the Norman version of the Norman conquest of England.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, Andy, Hope, Kate, Dave and Granny, face many problems when they move to homesteading grounds in southern Arkansas. Andy heads an organization to end lawlessness in town and they support a man for sheriff who is sympathetic toward their difficulties. During church services, a cyclone strikes and Birdie Webster, afraid of dying, cries to the congregation that she has made slanderous statements concerning Hope. Big Halleck, handsome young neighbor, proposes to Hope and their engagement is announced. Oreen Webster, 16-year-old flighty girl, elopes with Hank Butler, a guitar player who leaves town for a radio engagement.

CHAPTER XXIX

Jerry said Mr. Burke would win and he based his predictions on the loyalty of the homesteaders. "Martin's crowd may get an even break in the rest of the county," he said. "They're working mighty hard, and their machine's strong. But the homesteaders will swing it. They hold the balance of power."

"If Martin wins," Andy said, "we're headed for trouble. They're just waiting to pop it to us after the votes are counted!"

"Martin won't win," Jerry assured him. "Keep these people in line. If a man misses a meeting, send someone to find out why."

"We're in line," Andy told him. "On election day, less than three weeks from now, we'll show you."

"That's the way to talk!" I'm making a good race too, if anybody asks you."

"Nobody does," Andy said dryly. "Everybody knows it."

The last week of the campaign was at hand, and politicians were making whirlwind finishes. Andy could scarcely get any work done, with so many handshakers driving up at all times of the day, and often in the evening. Not only the candidates themselves, but their workers, genial and filled with promises, were planting seeds for election-day harvest.

"Well," Kate said resourcefully, "they do take your mind off the drought. That's a help."

"Make the most of it, Andy," said Granny. "Election years are the only ones in which poor farmers know any importance. They're popular men until after the votes are counted!"

It was at this time that a letter came from Gertrude, the first since early summer. She was dreadfully sorry that she and Wilton wouldn't be able to drive down this summer: "We plan a short trip to Wisconsin—nearer than Newcastle, you know—and hope we can take more time off next summer. Wilton, poor dear, is slaving himself to death. Reconversion and labor troubles, you know. It's really dreadful." She finished with a special word to Mrs. Craig: "Mother, dear, perhaps you can come and visit with us during the winter. It's hot in Chicago this time of year, but pleasant in winter. Wilton sends his love to you."

"Hot now in Chicago!" Granny said sadly, gazing out at "heat monkeys" shimmering over the baked land. "I feel for those poor people."

"Now, Granny," Andy teased, "isn't it nice to have at least one son-in-law who's a success?"

"Yes, it is," she admitted, smiling at him. "And I admire you more and more all the time, Andy Ives!"

Birdie Tells News of Oreen

There were candidates' picnics here and there during the last week before election day, but the Iveses attended none of them. Andy and Big thought it better to have such a gathering for the homesteaders in the church grove. There was a full attendance, and each family brought baskets of food for the "dinner on the ground." Some brought watermelons. Others brought packed freezers of homemade ice cream. It was a gala occasion.

Brother Cowann was there too. He limped a little. Birdie told Kate that he was suffering another "tech of the athaletic foot." Just before they broke up, he called the crowd into the church to pray for rain. "And we will keep on prayin' till it rains," he said firmly. "The power of prayer is great, my brothers!"

On election night, Harley and Birdie came to the Ives house to sit until bedtime. Mr. Flipp and Mr. Eliot were there too. All the countryside, except those two, were excited and waiting the returns. Mr. Eliot had brought his violin along, to while the evening away with artistic endeavor.

"Where is Miss Hope?" he asked.

"She stayed in town, with Barbara," Kate told him. "Barb and Jerry will bring her home when the returns are in."

"I think it's nice," Birdie said, "that Hope got in with the Bird girl. An' ever'body's so tickled that her an' Big is goin' to get married."

Kate looked at the woman, remembering how she had once been wont to speak ill of Bigelow Halleck. "Yes, I think they'll be very happy," she said. "They're making it a double wedding, with Jerry and Barbara this fall."

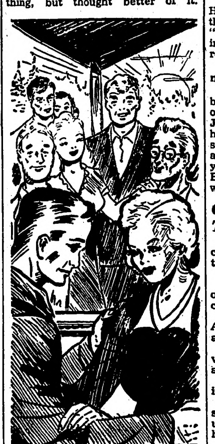
"Now, ain't that nice!" Birdie exclaimed. "One weddin' at a time is sweet enough, but two at oncet is just miratiously wonderful!" She began sniffling then, and Harley patted her shoulder clumsily, saying, "Now, sugah, don't start that."

"Can't help cryin' when I think of 'Reen," Birdie said, wadding and unwadding her damp handkerchief. "You know, I used to figger that Big would like Oreen some day, an' I talked ag'in him, to steer other gals off. I was sinful then. It was before I had repented."

"How is Oreen now?" Kate inquired.

"Well, her an' Hank got married in Tennessee. The last I heerd from her, Hank was still on the radio, an' she was in the fam'ly way. Lawsy me!"

Mr. Eliot started to say something, but thought better of it.



"This is nice," Jerry said, "but we've got to go. Come on, Barb."

Granny also gave no sign of having heard the report on Oreen's marital progress.

Waiting for the Election Returns

Thunder answered him, away off in the south. He stood still, listening, to be sure. It came again, barely a rumble, and the sheet lightning was dim above the trees; but a cloud was making up back there!

He ran into the house, to take the news to the others.

A light breeze was starting up when Andy came outside, and he vowed he could smell rain. "When it rains at night this time of year," he said, "it's usually a soaker. It'll make the cotton," he added with calm joy, "and it'll help the young corn a lot. We can plant fall truck too." He laid his hand on Dave's shoulder. "A good rain tonight will mean money and food in fall and winter. It'll mean that our first year out here has been a good one."

Dave nodded. "That's good," he said casually. But he knew the depth of his father's feeling and the glory that was in his father's heart. Andy's words came back to him: "No land is free." They were true! Free land certainly wasn't free, anyway!

Harley came out then. He had been delayed by Mr. Eliot, who had been explaining atomic energy to him. "Well, Ives, that's a rain, shore!" he exulted. "The air's just right, promisin' a gully washer. Looks like Brother Cowann done us some good, after all!"

The cloud came up fast. By ten thirty the promise of rain was sure. In the bright lightning they could see the smooth, gray-blue expanse rearing in the south, with great, darker streaks of rain combing down it.

Dave was at the door, watching. He saw the lights of a car swing through the trees in the distance. "It's Jerry," he announced, "turning off the gravel onto the dirt road."

They went out, eager for the news.

It was Jerry and Big, with Barbara and Hope. Before the lights of the car beamed full on the house, Jerry started blowing a triumphant horn. It was still blasting the swamp silence when he brought the car to a stop before the house. The four young people piled out. Hope and Big were swinging hands as they walked into the lighted area.

Good News for The Homesteaders

"Ladies and gentlemen," Jerry called, "greet the new county attorney!"

"Well, speech!" Dave whooped.

"No time now. We'll have to get off this dirt road before the rain comes."

"What about the sheriff's race?" Andy asked. "We're not worried about you."

"Mr. Burke won by five hundred votes," Big told him. "We homesteaders swung it!"

"Well, hallelujah!" Harley rasped in joy. "Ain't that fine?"

"Thank the good Lord!" Andy said reverently. "It's a blessing for us all. Now, we're somebody out here in the woods!"

"This is nice," Jerry said, "but we've got to go. Come on, Barb. Big, I'll drop you off at the corner. Good night, happy folks."

"Wait, young feller," Mr. Flipp ordered, advancing upon him. "I got that pup fer you. Jessie Bell had a litter las' night. They's one mighty cute little black-an'-white spotted one."

"I'll have to get it later," Jerry broke in. "The rain's—"

"Shore, you'll have to git it later. They've just arrove. But don't fergit that I'm a-savin' it fer you—a weddin' present." Then Mr. Flipp drew himself to a height of dignity and struck a stance foretelling important, planned words. "Mr. Burke an' Miss Bird," he said solemnly, "I take this means of wishin' my felicitation on you in departin' from the paths of celebrity."

"Mmmm!" Jerry said, startled. Barbara caught her breath. Both started a quick word of thanks for this send-off, but Granny got in first.

"Don't you mean celibacy, Mr. Flipp?" she asked in the very gentlest way.

He turned a chill eye upon her. "That is whut I said, ma'am."

RAISE CATTLE, CROPS OR NURSERY STOCK IN AMERICA'S FINEST HUNTING & FISHING TERRITORY
The territory near Beaufort, South Carolina, has an ideal climate with a summer average of 76°, winter 57°. It approximates that of Los Angeles, California, or Gainesville, Florida. There is abundance of fresh water. Favorable climate makes possible year round grazing and production of adequate hay and silage for prize winning cattle and hogs. We can offer various size and priced truck farms which give three or four crops yearly. Good markets. Along with many fine values in farms, ranches and homes, we also offer two excellent gladioli, camellia or evergreen farms, in the South Carolina coastal plain. All territory near Beaufort affords fine deer, quail, duck hunting, and fishing in season.
All properties advertised are priced by owners. We receive realty commissions only. No land selling schemes. Write for descriptive details. References, Peoples Bank, Beaufort, S. C.

JUST JESTING

Open and Shut Case

There probably are millions of cases of unreturned umbrellas but Pat O'Rourke was unfortunate enough to be sued for failing to return one he had borrowed.

Just before the trial opened Pat managed to get the umbrella back into the original owner's custody, but the latter went ahead with the suit, contending that the article was damaged beyond repair.

When it came time for Pat to speak his piece he stood up before the court and with his feelings irreparably injured said:

"Yer Honor, in the first place Oi niver borryed the danged thing, in the second place it wuz just thot way whin I got it, and in the third place I returned it in perfect shape, Oi did."

Prevaricator

Joe and Jim crawled into their bright red hunting suits, cradled their guns in their arms and made for the woods. They had penetrated the preserves for only a short distance when Joe sighted a deer. He raised his gun and fired. A defective shell caused the barrel to explode. He put his hand to his face and then looked at it. It was covered with blood. "I'm dead," he screeched hysterically and keeled over in a dead faint.

Jim looked at his stricken companion, picked him up and carried him all the way to the morgue. The doctor looked at the bleeding man, examined him, then turned to Jim.

"Why have you brought this man here?" he asked. "He isn't dead."

Jim seemed startled. "Are you sure, doctor?" he demanded.

"Of course I am sure," replied the doctor.

"I'll never believe another word that guy tells me," Jim said in disgust. "He told me he was dead."

Time Would Tell

Neighbor — "A remarkable old man, your granduncle. When he died he had every tooth in his head, his eyesight was very good and his hearing was excellent. To the best of my knowledge he retained full possession of his faculties until the very end."

Grandnephew — "Well, we'll be able to make sure of that when his will is read tomorrow."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Huge Crop Surpluses May Bring On Widespread Federal Farm Controls; Three Pact Nations Unify Defense

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

CROP REPORT:

Punitive Plenty

It was an ironical twist that American farmers, by producing in 1949 the second largest crop in all U.S. history, may have shackled themselves with broad government controls for years to come.

The year's harvest acreage was the largest since 1932 when depression-ridden farmers sought to offset declining prices by expanding production.

Except for bad weather during the growing season in some sections of the nation, the 1949 crop total might easily have set a new record. Even so, the harvest was so large that the U.S. department of agriculture felt called upon to invoke production controls of various kinds to reduce the volume next year. These controls probably would extend to cotton, peanuts, major types of tobacco, rice, potatoes and soybeans.

The agriculture department said the huge harvest was the result of uniformly large production of most crops, rather than record volumes of a few individual ones. Records were marked up only for rice, dry beans and peas.

The figures:

Corn, three billion, 378 million bushels; livestock feed-grain, 126 million tons; vegetable oil-seeds; soybeans, flaxseed, peanuts, cotton-seed, 15.33 million tons; tobacco, two billion pounds; fruit production, nine million, 800 thousand tons.

Yields per acre were above average for most crops, although wheat, flaxseed and dry peas were notable exceptions. Nearly 163 million tons of the eight grains were harvested during the year.

COMIC BOOKS:

Get Last Laugh

There may not be any laughs in current comic books—as so many psychologists, psychiatrists, educators and ministers have charged—But there was certainly more than an abdominal chuckle for the comic book entrepreneurs, themselves, in a spectacular respectability recently accorded their products.

For, as amazing as it may seem, the U. S. state department was to incorporate the comic book technique in its latest bid for the minds of non-Communist Asiatics.

WITH THEIR THEMES based on the lives of American heroes, 260,000 copies of the picture-series books had been scheduled for delivery early in January.

The books were to be sent to South Korea, Thailand, French Indo-China and Indonesia. The hope was that through hand-to-hand circulation information about the history and background of the United States would be spread widely in areas under strong Communist pressure but which, as yet, had not capitulated.

THE SERIES was to include 32-page books of the lives of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Walt Whitman, Abraham Lincoln, Andrew Carnegie, Jane Addams, Thomas A. Edison, and George Washington Carver.

Libraries and other agencies of the state department's public affairs division, already on the scene, would distribute the books at public showings of American documentary films and other such occasions. American libraries operate in all countries where the books are to be distributed.

PANCAKE DAY:

Idea Spreading

A familiar and popular event in some United States communities, unknown in many more, National Pancake day is beginning to catch on in many localities.

An ancient as far as international observance goes, the event has been observed elsewhere in the world for hundreds of years. No artificial "Johnny-come-lately" idea, the day has long been observed in Great Britain and many other countries in Europe—always on the day before Lent begins.

THE NEXT Pancake day falls on February 21, 1950, when here, in the United States. some communities will mark the day in city-wide celebration, a sort of midwinter fair at which everyone eats pancakes. In many other communities, church groups (frequently Episcopalians) have long observed the day with quiet breakfasts, luncheons and suppers—all of which feature pancakes.

UMBRELLA:

For Amphitheatre

Most everyone has speculated about if and when it would come, but now, apparently, it has arrived—a revolutionary rain-defying umbrella for an amphitheatre.

According to the designers, it can cover the amphitheatre in two and one-half minutes at the flick of a switch. The device isn't actually on the market yet, but will be built next fall to house activities of the Pittsburgh Civic Light Opera.

Raps Big Steel

Everett Kassarow, executive secretary of the CIO, tells a congressional committee that big steel's hiking the price of steel is a "scandalous situation" and asks the committee to investigate it. In the recent price raise, the steel industry said recent welfare and pension concessions to labor made the increase necessary.

PACT DEFENSE:

One Broad Pattern

Probably pointing the way toward a general North Atlantic pact policy, the United States, Great Britain and Canada have worked out procedures for practically a complete exchange of information concerning military weapons and fighting techniques each country develops.

THE OFFICIAL announcement to that effect was a guarded one, but defense department spokesmen said the three nations will pool all data on just about everything in the way of conventional weapons used by their respective fighting forces and together will study such advanced weapons as guided missiles. There was no indication of the atomic bomb in this "share-the-know-how" deal.

The goal, according to the announcement, was to make not only standard weapons interchangeable, but to draw on the incentive techniques of scientists and the "operational procedures" developed by military planners.

THE STEP, in any manner of speaking, was a prudent one if the democracies are convinced that among the best avenues of peace is one that leads to the ultimate in preparedness.

There is a most plausible school of thought among international diplomats, that if a consolidation of sufficient strength is mustered by the western powers, there need be no fear of World War III, no matter how much the Russians might desire one. For whatever else may be said of Russia's Stalin, he has never been branded as a complete idiot.

After Stalin, of course, anything might happen, for ambitious men ofttimes let their ambition cloud their vision to the extent that they can't see where they are going. Give such men enough power, and the war everyone fears might well be in the making.

TOP 10 MEN:

Rated Outstanding

More than 1,500 newspapermen had been called upon to choose, in their opinion, the 10 outstanding men of the world during 1949. At first blush that would appear to be a staggering assignment, but there is no newsman worthy the name who won't give you an opinion on anything at any time.

THE TEN "outstanding men of the year," as announced in the 1949 Year News Annual were:

Dr. Albert Schweitzer, religion; Dean Acheson, U. S. Secretary of state, statesmanship; Dr. Ralph Bunche, world peace; Dr. Charles Seymour, Yale university president, education; Walter Reuther, president of the CIO-UAW, labor; Jackie Robinson, Brooklyn Dodgers second baseman, sports; Serge Koussevitsky, Boston symphony orchestra, music; Arthur Miller, "Death of A Salesman," drama; Stanley Kramer, producer of the movie "Home of The Brave," movies; Milton Berle, radio and television.

CRITICS of these selections might charge that the selectors let the headlines of the year, rather than the gentlemen's accomplishments, get in their eyes when they made their choices.

New Probe Asked

Whatever else might occupy congressmen, there appeared to be no lacking of probe subjects. For instance, Representative Buchanan (D., Pa.) announced that a special house lobbying investigating committee would begin looking into real estate and medical issues.

Buchanan is chairman of the committee which will do the looking. The committee also will investigate "other-side" lobbying.

Corn Ears Reveal Whether Plant Was Well Fed or Starved

CHICAGO—The corn you harvested this fall can give you valuable tips for getting higher yields next year, if you will take a little time to examine some of the ears.

Those ears can tell you whether the corn plant was well fed or starved. That makes a big difference in the size of your crop. For only well fed corn can produce high yields.

Look at the ears shown in the accompanying photograph. All but No. 1 show signs of plant food starvation. Ear No. 1 is a normal, well fed, fully developed ear. It has good luster and polish. It holds its finish to the tip. The kernels are deep and well filled.

Ear No. 2 was short of nitrogen. It has good luster and the kernels are well filled. Nature makes nubbins like this when there isn't enough nitrogen in the soil to make full-sized ears. That is its insurance of seed for another year.

Phosphate hunger is illustrated by ear No. 3. Here you find rows of kernels that did not fill. Because of the phosphate shortage, some silks were delayed and came out too late to catch any pollen. The kernels were not fertilized, so they failed to fill.

Ear No. 4 was starved for potash. The ear is pointed and chaffy. The cob is limber and weak.

"A few deficient ears don't make a starved crop," says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. "But if you have more nubbins than good ears in your crib, then more fertilizer would have made more corn at lower cost per bushel.

"When plant food starvation signs are present, you can take steps to correct the situation and boost corn yields next year. A soil test will give you an idea of what is needed to provide a full, well-balanced supply of nutrients for the crop. You can build soil tilth, structure and organic matter to get maximum yields with a crop rotation that includes well fertilized deep-rooted legumes."

When One Is Drowning

The belief that a drowning person rises to the surface three times before dying is very widely held. Even Shakespeare apparently accepted it (Twelfth Night, I., v., 130). Accounts of witnesses, however, reveal the fact that some people, when drowning, have risen to the surface many times before finally disappearing while other persons have drowned by one submersion, and never came to the surface at all. No rule can be made regarding the number of times a body may or may not come to the surface.

Voting, From Latin Word

Voting from the Latin word "votum," which meant a solemn promise is older than history. The earliest method of voting was by "clamoring." The people let their will be known by shouting "yea" or "nay" or by clashing their spears on shields. This latter practice, known as suffragium (a responsive crash) in ancient Rome, is the origin of our word "suffrage." Later, in Greece, voting was done by a show of hands or by pebbles dropped in a ballot box.

The First Earring

According to a Mohammedan legend, the origin of earrings is thus stated: Sarah, being jealous of Hagar, declared she would not rest until her hands had been imbued in her bondmaid's blood. Then Abraham pierced Hagar's ear quickly, and drew a ring through it, so that Sarah was able to dip her hand in the blood of Hagar, without bringing the latter into danger. From that time it became a custom among women to wear earrings.

Bacon Designed Clothes

Francis Bacon, the celebrated essayist who some people think wrote Shakespeare's plays, spent his spare time devising new styles in men's clothes. He made 1,200 drawings of freakish raiment and had tailors make some of them up. When no friends of his would wear any of the wild and giddy costumes, he hired men to put them on and promenade the London streets.

Epidote

Epidote, is a native orthosilicate of calcium, aluminum and iron. Occurring in granular masses in fibrous forms and as monoclinic crystals, the color may be red, white, black, or pistachio green. Fine epidote crystals used in jewelry are found in France, Switzerland, Austria, Norway and many parts of America.

Demosthenes' Orations

Some of Demosthenes' chief orations are, the three "Philippics," three "Olynthiacs," "On the Peace," "On the Embassy," "On the Affairs of the Chersonese," and "On the Crown." The last is a defense of his career and by many is considered his masterpiece.

Noble Metals

Because gold, silver and platinum are quite unsociable metals, taking part in very few chemical reactions and holding themselves aloof from the common run of chemical substances, the alchemists called them "noble metals" and the name has clung to them ever since.

Don't Gamble AWith Chance

Often in our haste or enthusiasm we throw caution to the winds, and all too often suffer the tragic results. It's far better to take a little more time and a little more care and do things the safe way than to gamble with the chance of an accident.

Use for Casein

Casein is the curd of milk. After being chemically treated, it is used to coat paper and make glue, coldwater paints, buttons, combs, knife handles, art plaster, insect poison, imitation pearl, amber and turquoise and many other objects.

White Oak Worshiped

The white oak of Europe, very similar to the American species, is the oak of myth and poetry. Celts and Britons worshiped it, and the Druids built their sacred fire under its branches.

Dope-Traffic Beetle

A beetle found in Java secretes a narcotic. It allows ants to feed on this secretion, which causes them to become unconscious and easily eaten.

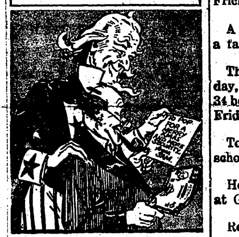
Uncle Sam Says



Have you ever stopped to analyze the reasons why Christmas Day has such a tremendous hold on you and your family? Of course there's the real significance of the day, and the tree and family reunion, but back of these happy events is a feeling of safety and security. Safety and security are linked with financial well being, firm underpinnings for your very home. Regular systematic savings out of your income produce safety and security. The best way to save effectively is to save before you spend. You can do this very thing by signing up on Payroll Savings Plan for buying United States Savings Bonds where you work, or enrolling in the Bond-A-Month Plan where you bank if you are self-employed.

Ole J. Lunke. Pioneer, Early Member of Naz. Church, Died

The community was saddened on Sunday to hear of the sudden death of Ole Lunke, 85, pioneer of this community. His son Hilmer Lunke and Dr. Bratrud of Thief River Falls took him to the hospital at one o'clock that night where he was treated for pneumonia. He died that morning. Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:00 p. m. at the Nazareth Lutheran church. Rev. Kronlokken of Thief River Falls will conduct the service. Collins-Carlson Funeral Home will have charge of arrangements.

Ads Used to Find Homes For Children 10 to 12 Years

Amid the advertising copy coming in this week is a new and unusual order. It requests that the following be inserted in the classified section of this newspaper:

"HOMES WANTED

Permanent adoptive homes are needed by 10 to 12 year old children who have lost the care and support of their parents. The children need the security of an adoptive home and the love and guidance of parents. Write State Division of Social Welfare, 117 University Ave., St. Paul.

Jarle Leirfallen, director of the State Welfare Division, and his staff have decided to resort to newspaper advertising to find homes for some of the older boys and girls in the Division. The Division usually has some 200 such children awaiting adoption, and others who later will be ready for new homes.

"Want ads are used successfully to meet all kinds of material needs," Mr. Leirfallen points out. "I see no reason why they may not be used with advantage to find homes for boys and girls who have lost their parents. We are interested primarily in finding homes for older children. applications for younger children far exceed the supply. But children of ten long for a home, too, and there are many satisfactions in adopting them, along with an opportunity for service which cannot be measured."

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Tufte of Portland, Oregon, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hoel and Sylvia of Erskine Mr. and Mrs. J. Reed and girls, Mrs. Leo Horien and daughters, Mrs. Bertha Hagglund and son Oscar visited at the O. J. Bratteli home Sunday.

Change in Farm Income Tax Time

For those who haven't completed the job, County Agent Ferbes lists these main points of consideration:

There are no changes from last year in the income tax forms, rates, or information needed to compute the net farm profit.

However, there is one new provision. According to a recent law a farmer who is on the calendar year basis may file his 1949 income tax return and pay the total tax owed by January 31, 1950.

Or, he may follow the old system of making a declaration of estimated tax and pay that amount by January 15, then file his final return by March 15.

The provisions of the new bill apply only to farmers, Forbes said. For one to be classified as a farmer, at least two-thirds of his gross income must come from farming.

Every person whose gross income during the year was $600 or more must file a return, even though no tax may be due. For farmers, gross income includes total income from all sources.

Television Stations

Copper and copper-base alloys are being extensively employed in the construction of television broadcasting stations. Probably the most dramatic application is the wide use of copper tube for transmission circuits. One of the largest installations of this type is Station WKY in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. Approximately 2,000 feet of 6 1/8" copper tube and about 3,000 feet of 3½" copper tube was required for this installation.

First Sherbet

Though the glory of the Roman empire faded, another romantic figure in the pages of history reintroduced ice cream to civilization more than a thousand years later. JUST JESTING

Fine Technique

Old Mrs. Jones had led a sheltered life and had never heard of a lawyer before.

"Just what does a lawyer do for a living?" she asked her grandson.

"A lawyer, grandma," he explained, "is a man who induces two other men to strip for a fight, then charges them for holding their clothes."

The Cad!

As the young lady oyster snuggled back into the sand after her first date with the dashing lobster she nudged her girl friend and whispered:

"It was wonderful. Simply wonderful. He took me to that secluded rock near the sandbar, looked into my eyes, whispered sweet nothings in my ear, put his arms around me, and then——"

As she uttered those last words the lady oyster clutched at her throat and groaned in mortification.

"Oh, Good Lord—my pearls."

Change Seen for Health Measure; Frenzied Reds Acclaim Stalin at 70; Hungary Off-Limits for Americans

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

HEALTH BILL:
Changes Planned

There was little likelihood that it would amount to anything in the long run—since the bill seems foredoomed to failure—but Oscar Ewing, federal security administrator, let it be known he will recommend some changes in the administration's medical - insurance bill now before congress.

EWING'S conviction that the measure as drawn could stand some revision came after he obtained a personal insight into the socialized health program as practiced in England and other European countries.

Ewing said his recommendations were not completely formulated, but indicated there would be a provision in the bill to reduce the opportunity for collusion between patients and doctors to augment medical fees.

The approach under consideration by the U.S. survey group is to require the patient to pay a part of the cost of the medical service —not to a doctor, but to an insurance fund.

AS THE U.S. BILL is now drafted, doctors would be compensated in any or all of three ways —a per capita payment irrespective of service, a straight salary, or a fee basis.

However, it might very well be much ado about nothing, as it seemed apparent neither the people of the U.S., the medical profession, or a sufficient number of congressmen are in the mood for installation of socialized medicine in the United States.

HUNGARY:
Off-Limits

The United States, irked and with patience worn thin, placed Communist-controlled Hungary off limits for Americans traveling abroad.

The action was taken because the Hungarian government has paid no attention to U.S. demands that Robert A. Vogeler, an official of the International Telephone & Telegraph corporation had not been released after his arrest on November 18. At that time, several other Americans were taken into custody by the Hungarians.

The American note placing the travel-ban on Americans to Hungary again demanded Vogeler's release and reserved the right to claim damages for any injuries he may have suffered.

Although the U.S. protest was directed only to the Vogeler case, a state department spokesman said that it also applied to the arrest of Israel Jacobsen, head of the American joint distribution committee's Hungarian office.

It was a strong note and indicated the temper of the U. S. state department, but its effect could be determined only in the release or further detention of Vogeler and his imprisoned fellow-Americans.

CUPID:
Busy Fellow

Cupid was a very busy fellow indeed as the holiday season came and went. And most of his activity was centered in the upper brackets of U.S. celebrities.

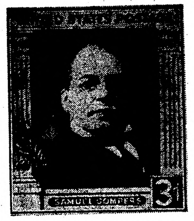
Hardly had he sat down to rest after bringing Vice-President Alben W. Barkley and Mrs. Hadley together at the altar, when he was up and off again, this time to bring about the union of New York Mayor O'Dwyer and fashion stylist Elizabeth Sloan Simpson. This romance culminated with a wedding in Florida.

BUT the little fellow with the wings and the bow and arrows wasn't having any rest. With the ink barely dry on the press announcements of Mayor O'Dwyer's wedding, headlines carrying a really romantic wallop were screaming again.

And this time, Cupid had hit where it hurt. Thousands of movie-struck females across the nation, with a goodly number of them being Hollywood's own fair and famous, were shocked, then grieved as they learned that long-time movie idol Clark Gable had wed.

HANDSOME, he-man Gable had taken to wife the widow of the late Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. She was the former Lady Ashley. Gable gave his age as 48, his bride said she was 39. The marriage was the fourth for each.

Labor Honored



This is a photograph of the new three-cent U.S. postage stamp which will be issued to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Samuel Gompers, great American labor leader. It will be printed in purple and will go on sale in Washington on January 27.

STALIN:
Big Birthday

The Soviet-dominated world went into a frenzy as each nation and satellite strove to outdo the others in paying tribute to Russia's Joseph Stalin on his 70th birth anniversary.

THE RUSSIANS were in their usually rare form, using the occasion to hurl a thunderous demand for peace at the world. In order to achieve it, they would set up, they said, annual awards for those doing the most to preserve peace and to confound the "war mongerers." That category included, of course, all nations and governments out of sympathy with the Soviet aim of expansion.

Almost fantastic was the extent to which the Stalin-worshippers went in adulation of Stalin. Thousands of parcels and crates, trainloads of merchandise, whole exposition halls of trinkets and pictures, factories and socks, books, and horses, wines and toys, delicacies and cars were funneled toward Moscow from the Elbe to China, from the Arctic to the Black sea.

NO ONE MAN could ever use all the gifts, or read all the honors. No one man could ever distribute them. What it was all worth was anyone's guess, but certainly millions of dollars.

Eastern Germany alone collected 70 freight cars of gifts—one for each year—as a sort of whimsical reparations.

The western world paid little heed to the Soviet chest-beating over a desire for peace and, so far as the press recorded, England was the only nation among the North Atlantic pact signatories to send congratulations to Stalin on his birthday.

But for the Russians, themselves, to most of whom Stalin is more legendary than real, the thrilling, dramatic-high spot of the anniversary celebration came in Moscow when Stalin, himself, walked out on a stage to let the people see him.

INDONESIA:
Uneasy Freedom

The United States of Indonesia was an established fact. It had become formally free after 300 years of Dutch rule.

But the birth of freedom was no routine, casual affair. Just like the case with most republics, the birthday was grim and turbulent. Even as freedom was declared, the new nation deployed troops and maintained a state of siege in wide areas to prevent anticipated disturbances.

IT WAS EXPECTED that Communists and some die-hards would attempt to make trouble for the new republic and to embarrass it by creating disorders.

Hundreds of troops patrolled the streets of Batavia and machine-gun posts were set up at intersections. Dutch troops throughout the country were confined to barracks for two days to prevent clashes.

A UNITED NATIONS commission set a truce in the islands which ended the bloody fighting between the Indonesians and Dutch, and also supported a Dutch-Indonesian roundtable conference at the Hague last fall which led to the granting of Indonesian independence.

MECHANICAL BRAIN
Instrument Plots Airplane Performance

A giant computer, which engineers believe can do just about anything except eat and sleep is performing amazing feats in connection with analyses of airplane performance even before the airplane is built.

The device imitates an airplane in flight as it develops information vital to engineers planning aircraft for the future. It was lent by the navy's research section for use at the Vought aircraft company plant in Dallas.

According to engineers describing the device's functions, it's simple. They admit, however, that it takes years for an operator to learn how to interpret the answers which the machine gives. However, those studying the device say it's time well spent.

Painting Table Pad

QUESTION: Can you tell me of something that will darken table pads that are finished with white imitation leather or something of that kind? I would like to have them brown.

ANSWER: After washing and rinsing the surfaces, allow them to dry thoroughly. Wipe with turpentine and finish with two coats of quick-drying enamel. Dull the gloss of the first coat when hard and dry by rubbing lightly with very fine sandpaper. Dust off well and then apply the second coat.

The Ives family, Andy, Hope, Kate, Dave and Granny, face many problems when they move to homesteading grounds in southern Arkansas. Andy heads an organization to end lawlessness in town and they support a man for sheriff who is sympathetic toward their difficulties. During church services, a cyclone strikes and Birdie Webster, afraid of dying, cries to the congregation that she has made slanderous statements concerning Hope. Big Halleck, handsome young neighbor, proposes to Hope and their engagement is announced. Oreen Webster, 16-year-old flighty girl, elopes with Hank Butler, a guitar player who leaves town for a radio engagement.

CHAPTER XXIX

Jerry said Mr. Burke would win and he based his predictions on the loyalty of the homesteaders. "Martin's crowd may get an even break in the rest of the county," he said. "They're working mighty hard, and their machine's strong. But the homesteaders will swing it. They hold the balance of power."

"If Martin wins," Andy said, "we're headed for trouble. They're just waiting to pop it to us after the votes are counted!"

"Martin won't win," Jerry assured him. "Keep these people in line. If a man misses a meeting, send someone to find out why."

"We're in line," Andy told him. "On election day, less than three weeks from now, we'll show you."

"That's the way to talk!" I'm making a good race too, if anybody asks you."

"Nobody does," Andy said dryly. "Everybody knows it."

The last week of the campaign was at hand, and politicians were making whirlwind finishes. Andy could scarcely get any work done, with so many handshakers driving up at all times of the day, and often in the evening. Not only the candidates themselves, but their workers, genial and filled with promises, were planting seeds for election-day harvest.

"Well," Kate said resourcefully, "they do take your mind off the drought. That's a help."

"Make the most of it, Andy," said Granny. "Election years are the only ones in which poor farmers know any importance. They're popular men until after the votes are counted!"

It was at this time that a letter came from Gertrude, the first since early summer. She was dreadfully sorry that she and Wilton wouldn't be able to drive down this summer: "We plan a short trip to Wisconsin—nearer than Newcastle, you know—and hope we can take more time off next summer. Wilton, poor dear, is slaving himself to death. Reconversion and labor troubles, you know. It's really dreadful." She finished with a special word to Mrs. Craig: "Mother, dear, perhaps you can come and visit with us during the winter. It's hot in Chicago this time of year, but pleasant in winter. Wilton sends his love to you."

"Hot now in Chicago!" Granny said sadly, gazing out at "heat monkeys" shimmering over the baked land. "I feel for those poor people."

"Now, Granny," Andy teased, "isn't it nice to have at least one son-in-law who's a success?"

"Yes, it is," she admitted, smiling at him. "And I admire you more and more all the time, Andy Ives!"

Birdie Tells News of Oreen

There were candidates' picnics here and there during the last week before election day, but the Iveses attended none of them. Andy and Big thought it better to have such a gathering for the homesteaders in the church grove. There was a full attendance, and each family brought baskets of food for the "dinner on the ground." Some brought watermelons. Others brought packed freezers of homemade ice cream. It was a gala occasion.

Brother Cowann was there too. He limped a little. Birdie told Kate that he was suffering another "tech of the athaletic foot." Just before they broke up, he called the crowd into the church to pray for rain. "And we will keep on prayin' till it rains," he said firmly. "The power of prayer is great, my brothers!"

On election night, Harley and Birdie came to the Ives house to sit until bedtime. Mr. Flipp and Mr. Eliot were there too. All the countryside, except those two, were excited and waiting the returns. Mr. Eliot had brought his violin along, to while the evening away with artistic endeavor.

"Where is Miss Hope?" he asked.

"She stayed in town, with Barbara," Kate told him. "Barb and Jerry will bring her home when the returns are in."

"I think it's nice," Birdie said, "that Hope got in with the Bird girl. An' ever'body's so tickled that her an' Big is goin' to get married."

Kate looked at the woman, remembering how she had once been wont to speak ill of Bigelow Halleck. "Yes, I think they'll be very happy," she said. "They're making it a double wedding, with Jerry and Barbara this fall."

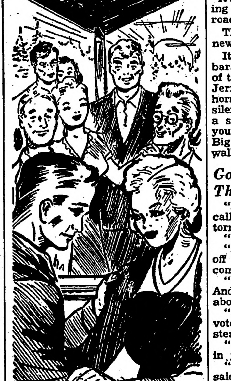
"Now, ain't that nice!" Birdie exclaimed. "One weddin' at a time is sweet enough, but two at oncet is just miratiously wonderful!" She began sniffling then, and Harley patted her shoulder clumsily, saying, "Now, sugah, don't start that."

"Can't help cryin' when I think of 'Reen," Birdie said, wadding and unwadding her damp handkerchief. "You know, I used to figger that Big would like Oreen some day, an' I talked ag'in him, to steer other gals off. I was sinful then. It was before I had repented."

"How is Oreen now?" Kate inquired.

"Well, her an' Hank got married in Tennessee. The last I heerd from her, Hank was still on the radio, an' she was in the fam'ly way. Lawsy me!"

Mr. Eliot started to say something, but thought better of it.



"This is nice," Jerry said, "but we've got to go. Come on, Barb."

Granny also gave no sign of having heard the report on Oreen's marital progress.

Waiting for the Election Returns

Thunder answered him, away off in the south. He stood still, listening, to be sure. It came again, barely a rumble, and the sheet lightning was dim above the trees; but a cloud was making up back there!

He ran into the house, to take the news to the others.

A light breeze was starting up when Andy came outside, and he vowed he could smell rain. "When it rains at night this time of year," he said, "it's usually a soaker. It'll make the cotton," he added with calm joy, "and it'll help the young corn a lot. We can plant fall truck too." He laid his hand on Dave's shoulder. "A good rain tonight will mean money and food in fall and winter. It'll mean that our first year out here has been a good one."

Dave nodded. "That's good," he said casually. But he knew the depth of his father's feeling and the glory that was in his father's heart. Andy's words came back to him: "No land is free." They were true! Free land certainly wasn't free, anyway!

Harley came out then. He had been delayed by Mr. Eliot, who had been explaining atomic energy to him. "Well, Ives, that's a rain, shore!" he exulted. "The air's just right, promisin' a gully washer. Looks like Brother Cowann done us some good, after all!"

The cloud came up fast. By ten thirty the promise of rain was sure. In the bright lightning they could see the smooth, gray-blue expanse rearing in the south, with great, darker streaks of rain combing down it.

Dave was at the door, watching. He saw the lights of a car swing through the trees in the distance. "It's Jerry," he announced, "turning off the gravel onto the dirt road."

They went out, eager for the news.

It was Jerry and Big, with Barbara and Hope. Before the lights of the car beamed full on the house, Jerry started blowing a triumphant horn. It was still blasting the swamp silence when he brought the car to a stop before the house. The four young people piled out. Hope and Big were swinging hands as they walked into the lighted area.

Good News for The Homesteaders

"Ladies and gentlemen," Jerry called, "greet the new county attorney!"

"Well, speech!" Dave whooped.

"No time now. We'll have to get off this dirt road before the rain comes."

"What about the sheriff's race?" Andy asked. "We're not worried about you."

"Mr. Burke won by five hundred votes." Big told him. "We homesteaders swung it!"

"Well, hallelujah!" Harley rasped in joy. "Ain't that fine?"

"Thank the good Lord!" Andy said reverently. "It's a blessing for us all. Now, we're somebody out here in the woods!"

"This is nice," Jerry said, "but we've got to go. Come on, Barb. Big, I'll drop you off at the corner. Good night, happy folks."

"Wait, young feller," Mr. Flipp ordered, advancing upon him. "I got that pup fer you. Jessie Bell had a litter las' night. They's one mighty cute little black-an'-white spotted one."

"I'll have to get it later," Jerry broke in. "The rain's—"

"Shore, you'll have to git it later. They've just arrove. But don't fergit that I'm a-savin' it fer you—a weddin' present." Then Mr. Flipp drew himself to a height of dignity and struck a stance foretelling important, planned words. "Mr. Burke an' Miss Bird," he said solemnly, "I take this means of wishin' my felicitation on you in departin' from the paths of celebrity."

"Mmmm!" Jerry said, startled. Barbara caught her breath. Both started a quick word of thanks for this send-off, but Granny got in first.

"Don't you mean celibacy, Mr. Flipp?" she asked in the very gentlest way.

He turned a chill eye upon her. "That is whut I said, ma'am."

To Lose Is to Win

By HAL G. VERMES

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

UP UNTIL that time I'm always of the idea that anybody what puts their cherries on a bangtail wants to win themselves plenty coin. But not Diamond Lou.

I first meets Diamond at Hialeah when he hails Mudder McMork and asks him to name the cluck in the third that will sure kiss the eight pole. McMork introduces me to Diamond Lou and then Diamond calls over his missus and knocks us down. I can see without my glasses she is a beautiful blond filly that I figure would weigh in on the light side of a hundred and ten. She's a staker all right and I know from the way Diamond Lou smiles all over her that he worked hard to get her in his stable and he wouldn't put her on the block for all there is and more; in fact, he's plenty sunk.

While I ought to know better, when I look into her blue glimmers I wish I could forget that I got a missus myself who was foaled 40 years ago; though I got to admit she don't look it, what with the wonderful art work the beauty specialists can do nowadays.

"Well," says I to Diamond Lou, "if you're set on backing losers, you come to the right man in Mudder McMork because he can pick all the also-rans with both hands tied."

"Sh-h-h!" says Diamond Lou, snapping a glimmer toward his missus. "Why, Mr. McMork has been highly recommended to me as the best figure man in Florida and I would very much appreciate some of his professional advice."

When he spills that I open my mouth and forget to shut it.

"Gentlemen," Diamond Lou adds, "the little wife and me is looking for the straight stuff on the staker what will walk away with the third race."

"Why," I states, "everybody knows who the favorite is. All you got to do is watch the totals on the machine. The heavy money in the third is placed on—"

Just then Mudder McMork steps on my favorite corn and I would of forgot my manners except for Diamond Lou's blond filly in there.

"Pardon me," says Diamond Lou, grabbing the missus, "I got to park the wife in the stand and make her comfortable. But I will be back, gentlemen, at which time I will accept your kind advices in confidence."

I'm sorry to see the little lady go because she rests my eyes. But I'm glad, too, because now I can speak freely to Mudder McMork.

"You're a cluck," he says, when I'm all out of breath. "Diamond Lou, like I told you before, don't want to win him any barrel of cherries today or never."

All of which don't sound like sense to me, but coming from McMork, I expect it. When Diamond Lou gets back again I asks him what.

"Diamond," I say, "Mudder McMork called me a cluck, which coming from him is a compliment. Just the same I am crazy to know if I am crazy. Before I make the pleasure of your acquaintance, Mudder tells me that it positively kills you with happiness to burn up a chunk on a badge horse. And then you wants to know how can you sure clean up a barrel of cherries in the third. So I am wild to know is this a system?"

Mudder McMork busts out laughing and Diamond Lou chortles and says: "I am giving you the straight goods now; I cannot afford not to lose. With me I got to drop my cherries everywhere or I am an unhappy man forever."

"That ought to be simple," I relates to him. "Why, I can drop my dinero all over the circuits without half trying."

"You think," explains Diamond Lou to me, "that it is easy to lose because you're always trying to win. But losing all the time is plenty harder than winning. Why, in this fascinating business, even if I pick a plater with a perfect record as a run-out horse, you can't sometimes never tell but the rest of the field will lay down and die and my plug cops the kitty. That I cannot let happen to me never."

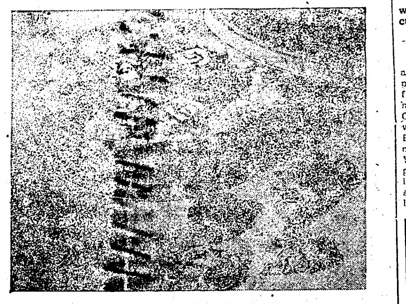
"I still don't know from nothing," I says.

"It is my beautiful little wife," states Diamond Lou, "what makes this difficult state of affairs. I meet her last year and falls for her right off forever. She knows I got heavy sugar, which helps a lot, but she says she cannot tie up with me because I am a turfite from way back and she will never marry a man who follows the bangtails."

Diamond Lou looks very sad for a minute. "This goes on many weeks," he continues, "and I am dying from the love bug. So what to do? I finally swears that I will give up all business with the turf if she will trot into my stable for life. Therefore, we are married and live happily ever after."

"But," I inquires of Diamond Lou, "how come you are still the same turfite and keeps betting your cherries plenty?"

"When I marry the missus," Diamond Lou says, "I swear to her that I will quit the tracks forever just as soon as I win some cherries only one time." Then he turns to Mudder McMork. "What," he asks, "did you say was the badge horse in the third that is sure to lose?"



COCONUT CHERRY DIVINITY

Coconut is a natural for your Christmas candy-making. Here its flavor is enhanced by toasting. Give your gift package variety by including variations of your favorite chocolate candy recipes, also.

- 2 cups sugar
- ⅔ cup water
- ½ cup light corn syrup
- 2 egg whites, stiffly beaten
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- Dash of salt
- ¾ cup shredded coconut, toasted and crumbled
- ¾ cup chopped raisins

Bring ½ cup sugar and ⅓ cup water to a boil and boil until a small amount of syrup forms a slightly firm ball in cold water (240°F.). While this mixture is boiling, bring remaining sugar and water and the corn syrup to a boil and boil until a small amount of syrup forms a hard ball in cold water (252°F.). Remove first syrup (240°F.) from fire and cool slightly; pour slowly over egg whites, beating constantly until mixture loses its gloss (1½ minutes). Then add second syrup (252°F.) slowly, beating as before. Fold in vanilla, salt, coconut, and raisins, and turn immediately into greased pan, 8x8 inches. Cool until firm. Cut in pieces, 1½x1 inches. Roll in additional toasted coconut, if desired. Makes 3½ dozen pieces.

Broken pecan meats may be substituted for raisins in this recipe.

Why Scoop No Longer Works Here

Scoop Blake paid us a friendly call at the Clarion's office last week and we were talking about when he was a reporter here.

"Remember how mad I got when I found out you were writing that election story right from your desk?" I asked him. "And how I made you get out and learn what a sheriff's job was all about?"

"I sure do, Joe," said Scoop. "I want to thank you for teaching me the 'hat-trick'—putting on my hat and finding out the facts, that is." Then we both had a good laugh because he found out so much that darn if he didn't run and get elected sheriff himself!

From where I sit, we should find out the facts before we try to talk about anything. When we do, we're inclined to be more tolerant... we're apt to understand a little more about the other fellow's preference for, say, his political candidate or for a temperate glass of beer now and then. I say, if you don't want to get tripped up, don't leap to conclusions!

American Pearls

Pearls have so long been considered as Oriental jewels that it will surprise many to learn that specimens from the United States have been sent to Europe and even to the Orient. The famous "Queen Pearl", valued at $10,000, was found near Patterson, N. J. Pearls are found in mollusks in Maine, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and the Mississippi valley. Artificial pearls are made in France from guanin, a pearl essence obtained from the scales of large herring.

Electricity on Farms

According to the last official estimate, three and one-half million farms, or 61 per cent, had electric power available on June 30, 1947. Two and a quarter million farms, or 39 per cent, did not have electric service on that date.

Take Plant Food Delivery Now to Be Sure Of Sufficient Supplies for Spring Needs

Fertilizer Bought Now Will Be on Hand for Spring Planting Operations.

CHICAGO—Prompt action in ordering fertilizer now is essential if farmers want to be certain of having supplies on hand for 1949 spring seeding, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

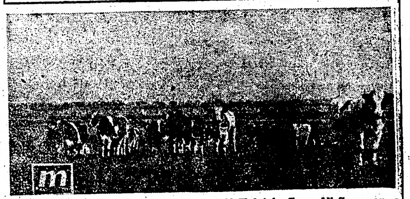
"The need for continuing the 'take delivery as available' practice is just as critical now as in war days," says a statement by the committee.

"Shortages of some raw materials are threatened. Supplies of nitrogen may fall below the volume predicted some months ago. Production days may be lost in some fertilizer factories because storage room is overcrowded with the finished product. Only if this plant food is moved out of warehouses and on to farms, can production schedules be maintained.

"And even if factories are able to work overtime, it is doubtful if 1949 spring supplies will meet demands for all grades and analyses wanted.

"The job of making, shipping and delivering fertilizer can no longer be crowded into a last-minute, spring rush period. Only if farmers order and take their supplies early can fertilizer manufacturers and producers of raw materials space their operations over a time period sufficient to meet most demands."

Crop-Building Soil Tilth Plus Plant Food Assures High Yields Regardless of Weather



Thirty-five Acres of Pasture Carried 40 Holstein Cows All Summer on This Minnesota Farm and Yielded 8½ Tons of Hay, Besides Building Soil Structure and Organic Matter.

CHICAGO—Weather extremes can mellow your soil for bumper yields some seasons, but your best all-year crop insurance is plenty of organic matter in the soil, declared a statement by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

"Record breaking 1948 corn and wheat crops were helped along by climate conditions, that improved soil tilth months before the growing season," says the statement.

"Wet spring weather in 1947 swelled the soil. Droughty spells late that summer dried the ground and shrunk it out. Subzero temperatures last winter froze the ground down a foot and a half in many areas. The drying and freezing promoted granulation and loosened the soil to a considerable depth.

"All these factors combined to provide extra good tilth and conditions particularly favorable to crop growth last season.

"Helpful as the weather was for last season's crop, you can't depend on it to mellow soil every year.

"But you can be sure of crop-building soil tilth regardless of weather, if you add plenty of organic matter to the soil. Organic matter builds soil structure. It opens the earth for air and water.

"Best source of organic matter is well-fertilized grasses and taprooted legumes grown regularly in the rotation."

Nohre-Seeger Wedding

Myrtle Nohre, daughter of Fred Lufkin, and Francis M. Seeger of Fergus Falls, son of Mrs. Anna Seeger of Tabor, Iowa, were united in marriage Monday noon, Jan. 9th, in the First Presbyterian church in Sisseton, S. D. The double ring candlelight ceremony was performed by Rev. Leslie B. Lewis.

Bob Armstrong, organist, played the traditional wedding marches and accompanied Leland Green who sang "O, Promise Me" as the bride and groom knelt by the altar.

Attending the couple were Mr. and Mrs. Russell G. Matheson of Whapeton, N. D. who are very close friends of the couple.

For her wedding, the bride chose a two piece aqua suit with aqua and black accessories and wore a large corsage of red roses Her attendant wore a grey suit with matching accessories and also a corsage of roses.

A wedding dinner was held at the Steak House at Breckenridge The bridal table was decorated with a wedding cake given by Mrs. Matteson.

Mr. and Mrs. Seeger left on a weeks wedding trip to Spent Lake and Council Bluffs, Iowa. They will make their home in Fergus Falls where the groom has his own business. The bride has lived in Crookston the past 4 years and was employed by the J. C. Penny Co.

Obituary of Ola J. Lunke

Funeral services were conducted from Nazareth Lutheran church on Saturday afternoon for Ole J. Lunke, pioneer of this community.

Rev. J. Kronlokken and Rev. V. G. Sorenson, officiated.

Ole J. Lunke was born in Gubransdalen, Norway, April 19, 1864. At the time of his death he was 85 years, 8 months and 18 days. He passed away Sunday January 8th at 7:30 at St. Lukes hospital at Thief River Falls.

He was baptized the 5th day of May, 1864 and confirmed April 4th 1880. On April 5, 1885 he immigrated to America and landed in New York the 19th.

After spending four years in in North Dakota he came to Holt and homesteaded in East Valley Township where he resided until his death.

He was married to Clara Knutson on Feb. 7th, 1889 at Crookston, and to this union seven children were born.

More Efficient Crop Production Is Key to High Profits, Low Costs

FARMERS hear a good deal about the need for cutting costs these days. This is important, with production expenses high and most farm prices slumping.

Where to cut is a problem. It is false economy to reduce costs by cutting down on essential items such as fertilizer, good seed, feed supplements or good heifers.

Missouri University agricultural economists advise farmers not to be "penny wise and pound foolish" in the matter of buying fertilizer. They point out that money spent on plant food is an investment that pays out in a short time. It gets more efficient crop production. And efficient crop production that yields more bushels per acre is the key to cutting costs and building profits.

The Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out that fertilizer does its best job of boosting yields and reducing costs when it is teamed up with other good soil and crop management practices. The heart of such a program is a good rotation built around soil-improving deep-rooted legumes. Among other steps are well-adapted, good quality seed; good cultural methods; returning crop residues and barnyard manure to the soil; and keeping soil and water at home by conservation practices such as cover crops, contour cultivation and strip cropping where needed.

Census Dist. Office Established

Establishment of a district office for the 17th Decennial Census of the United States in Bemidji, was announced today by Mr George Gunderson, Census District Supervisor for the Bemidji Area.

Mr. Anderson states that preliminary work on the 1950 Census, to be taken in April, will begin immediately. This includes organization of the district office conducting publicity, interviewing applicants for jobs and later training office clerks, field crew leaders and enumerators.

The territory included in the District which Mr. Anderson supervises includes Beltrami, Clearwater. Kittson, Lake of the Woods, Marshall, Pennington, Polk, Red Lake and Roseau Counties. Approximately 172 enumerators will be employed to take the 1950 Census in this area

They Call Them "Cots"

CANNERS call them "cots," but they are not cots to sleep on, but apricots to charm you with their delicious taste. They began their career as charmers back in ancient days in Asia, and they were not introduced into Europe until the time of Alexander the Great.

Out in California, apricots are a most important crop. The fresh apricot season starts about the middle of June and lasts for eight weeks. Only a small part of the apricot crop, however, is marketed fresh. The fruit is of such delicate texture that it will not stand shipment well. Fortunately, however, canners take over a large part of the "cots" when they are nicely sun-ripened, and store away the goodness in safe form for travel.

Fresh Fruit Flavor

Housewives who used to depend on dried apricots for their knowledge of this delicious fruit, are using more and more of the canned "cots" because of their delicious fresh-fruit flavor, and because more and more ways are constantly being devised by dietitians for their use. Here is a delicious apricot dessert which you will want to serve:

Apricot Cocoanut Snow: Beat two egg whites very stiff, having them ice cold. Add one tablespoon confectioner's sugar. Have the contents of one No. 2 can of apricots very cold, drain and mash the fruit with a fork. Add two tablespoons lemon juice, then add the apricots, and fold into the egg whites. Pile lightly in tall glasses. Sprinkle liberally with canned moist cocoanut and serve at once. This serves six persons.

Care of Towels

The way to prevent "long corners" on towels and an aid to folding them when dry, fold all towels lengthwise before hanging on the line.

Ringbo Rambles

The annual meeting of the Ringbo Immanuel church was held Jan. 11th and the following officers were elected: Mrs. Hilmer Swenson reelected secretary Herb Johnson reelected Treasurer, Mrs. Melvin Sorter, Mrs. Bill Larson and Mrs. Pete Sorter elected as Deaconessess. Art Swenson, Ingval Johnson, Myron Sorter, trustees. Pete Sorter was reelected Sexton, Clifford Larson, janitor, Mrs. Ingvald Johnson and Mrs. Art Swenson reelected organists. Auditors, Mrs. Ingvald Larson and Melvin Sorter. Ingathering, Bill Larson. It was deciddd to have Ladies Aid the second Thursday of every month, afternoon in winter, evening in summer. Mrs. Ingval Johnson will entertain Ladies Aid at Ringbo church Thursday Feb. 9th at 3 p. m.

The Ringbo Farmers Union Local did not have their meeting Jan. 13 due to bad weather and roads. Dates for the meeting will be arrangnd later.

Ringbo Luther League has closed down for the winter months as usual.

Mr. and Mrs. Pete Beeklund spent Monday evening of last week at the Pete Sorter home.

Percy Sorter from Middle River spent the week end at the Melvin Sorter home.

Ringbo School reopened last Tuesday after a two weeks vacation with Mrs. Hilmer Swenson teaching during the absence of Miss Sollom.

Arrests Made For Failure to Stop For School Bus

19 arrests for failure to stop for busses with the "Stop" signal arm extended were made in 1949, the Minnesota Highway Department reports. This is a greater number than in any previous year. The figure covers only arrests by state patrolmen on trunk highways, and does not include arrests by county or local authorities on other roads, nor arrests made on warrants sworn out by bus drivers.

The law requires all drivers of vehicles meeting or overtaking school busses loading or unloading children to stop when the Stop arm is extended, and remain stopped until the signal arm is retracted. The law applies on all roads outside built-up business or residential districts.

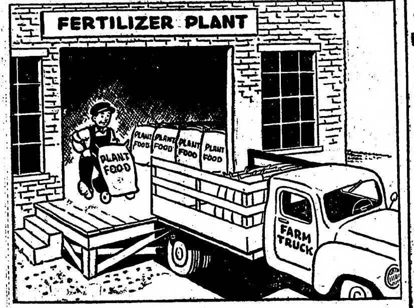
Bigger 1950 Fertilizer Demand Spurs Need For Prompt Action in Obtaining Supplies



Buying fertilizer early saves time and insures getting just what you want.

PROSPECTS of a "sizable increase" in the 1950 demand for fertilizer make it advisable for farmers to act promptly in ordering plant food now and taking delivery as soon as it can be arranged, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

More farmers may want more fertilizer than ever before next spring. The demand can be met only if fertilizer manufacturers can keep a steady flow of plant food moving out of their factories this winter. To accomplish this, the cooperation of farmers is essential in ordering early and taking delivery as soon as available.

Unless finished fertilizer continues to move to dealers and farmers, factory storage space will become overloaded and production schedules will have to be cut down. Already some factories report they are running out of storage space. If this trend continues the plant food production may not be sufficient to meet demands next spring.

In prewar days, says the statement, many farmers could wait until the last minute to get their plant food. With the greater demand, the manufacturing, curing and delivery of fertilizer can no longer be crowded into a seasonal rush period. Production operations, shipping and delivery now must be planned on a year-round basis.

The cooperation of farmers in ordering early made possible the big increase in the production and use of fertilizer in recent years. The continuance of that "order early" cooperation is essential today for every farmer to have the plant food he wants when he wants it next spring. This will save costly delays when every hour counts.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U.S. Formosan Intervention Urged; Drive Is Launched to Trim Budget Group to Press for Child Welfare;

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FORMOSA:
Shall We Intervene?

As the agitation for U. S. intervention in Formosa grows, many Americans will have a sharp flashback of memory to the days when Anthony Eden and others were urging boycotts against Mussolini and the Japs as campaigns of conquest were getting underway.

Now, there are many important U. S. officials and ex-leaders who argue that the United States must step in to keep Communist China from swallowing up Formosa. Use of armed force, if necessary, is recommended to stop that movement.

LATEST TO JOIN with those advocating intervention in Formosa was Herbert Hoover, former president of the United States. He contended that such a policy was necessary to safeguard this country's own security.

Hoover argued the U. S. should use its naval power to protect not only the big island stronghold of Formosa but also lesser islands which Chiang Kai-shek's forces were seeking to defend along the south China coast.

He declared such a step would "erect a wall against communism in the Pacific" and offer a "continued hope of some time turning China into the paths of freedom again."

HOWEVER, the decision was further complicated by a British stand that American China policy would strain Anglo-American relations. Indications were that Britain was just about ready to recognize the Chinese Communist regime.

Always the practical realist, Britain moves wherever her own best interests dictate, or where she thinks they dictate. Hence, for the U. S. to lash out at the Chinese Reds just when the British were trying to woo the Communist business apparently wasn't going to sit well with Great Britain.

BUDGET:
Drive for Balance

According to house Republican Leader Martin of Massachusetts, the United States government should be able to live within its income without raising taxes. That of course meant that the U. S. ought to be able to balance its budget.

MARTIN joined forces with Sen. Robert Taft, of Ohio, who is on record as saying he believes the federal budget could be balanced in fiscal 1951. The two lawmakers are united in a drive to attempt to force the government to live within its income.

The project obviously had more merit than chance for success, for with congress predominantly Democratic, there would be little probability of any great tax changes in the matter of reduced operating expenses.

All indications were that while there might not be any tax increases, there certainly would be little of tax reductions, despite administration claims that the government couldn't operate without more tax revenue. Where the balancing-up will come is problematical as yet.

TAFT and Martin outlined their views as congress reconvened. Both declared they would oppose vigorously any administration request for increases either in corporation or high-bracket income taxes.

Taft said he would not object to a deficit of about two billion dollars in 1951 if he were sure the government would get back into the black in fiscal 1952. The deficit this year is expected to run about 5.5 billion dollars.

BRITISH:
No, Thanks

Miffed because the world bank wanted to know too much about its operations, Great Britain's colonial development corporation withdrew its application to the international bank for a loan of five million dollars.

The 280-million-dollar government corporation, set up in 1948 to foster colonial development, said it wanted the loan to buy "indispensable" American-built land-clearing machinery.

THE CORPORATION would have been required to submit its detailed budget to the bank for some years ahead and would have had to make quarterly statements showing total assets, liabilities and expenditures of each of its multiple operations.

Chairman Lord Trefargne told newsmen the corporation would buy the "second-best" machinery constructed in Britain and Italy. He declared the bank's terms were "too onerous."

The corporation's projects now underway included:

Agricultural developments in Borneo, British Honduras, the Leeward islands, and Africa; forestry and mineral projects in British Guiana, and factory construction in northern Rhodesia, Kenya and Jamaica.

Atomic 'Advances'

David E. Lilienthal, atomic energy commission chief, told a news conference that there have been "several secret advances" in the development of atomic energy. He said these are comparable to the "breeder design" in 1949.

EDUCATION:
Money & Health

The needs of education in the nation apparently were to be well looked after in Washington, as far as interest and stressing of necessity were concerned.

The American Parents' Committee announced a nine-point program in the child welfare field for consideration at the current congress session.

THIS COMMITTEE was organized three years ago to work for a national program to benefit children.

Legislation the committee will press for will be:

The national school-health-services bill for an annual 35 million dollars grants-in-aid for school health examinations and treatment for all school children. This measure has been passed by the senate.

The public - school - construction bill, asking five billion to match state funds for a nation-wide survey of needs, and other sums for emergency school construction, which have been approved by the senate.

THE federal aid - for - education bill, which would provide 300 million for grants-in-aid to the states under a formula which gives a larger proportion of funds to the needier states. This bill passed the senate but was blocked in the house because of the controversy over "services" to parochial schools.

The national child-research bill, which asks 7.5 million annual for research in child life and developments.

The bill on social security revisions, asking increased benefits for dependent children.

The local public-health units bill, which would increase health safeguards for children.

AN INCREASE in funds for the Children's Bureau.

Increased school lunch appropriations.

COFFEE:
$11 More

The recent zoom in coffee prices, which jammed food stores with excited crowds of economy-conscious shoppers, will add a little over $11 to the average American household's coffee bill for 1950 unless fewer or thinner cups are drunk this year, says the family economics bureau of Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

The retail rise in the United States, averaging around 22 cents a pound from mid-summer to mid-December, parallels an almost equal climb of approximately 21 cents a pound in Latin-American prices on green coffee, according to the bureau.

AMOUNTING to over 38 times the cost of the coffee price rise, or approximately $425 per year, is the average U. S. family's share of the 20-billion-dollar increase since 1939 in our government's annual non-military expenditures, the bureau points out.

A yearly saving of $86, directly and indirectly, would be the average family's share in the four billion dollars which it is estimated can be saved each year merely by modernizing and streamlining government operations; this saving would pay for the average household's entire annual supply of 51 pounds of store-bought coffee, even if the price went to $1 a pound, and still leave $35 for sugar and cream, the bureau calculates.

Sleep Habits Revealing

Since practically a third of one's entire lifetime is spent sleeping, this phenomenon properly engages the attention of scientists.

As witness the conclusions by Prof. Alfred Adler, psychologist, that the person who sleeps on his back, stretched out like a soldier at attention, wants to be as great as possible. The sleeper who curls up like a hedgehog, he says, probably lacks courage.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR
by HOMER CROY

CHAPTER I

What a softie going home makes me! The old neighborhood, the old hedge-rows, even the corner posts. Why, I helped set that corner post! I remember the "deadman" at the foot of it. You can pretty well tell a farmer by his corner posts. If his corner posts are firmly anchored, stand straight and are braced and double-wired, then you can know the man is a good farmer. You see that corner post there, leaning now and wobbly in the knees? Well, I helped Newt Kennedy plant that post. It chokes me all up, when I think of those days, me helping Newt. Seems funny that looking at an old woodpecker-eaten corner post would choke a person up, doesn't it? Newt—my boyhood hero! I wish I could have one now so great. Big brawny, fun-loving, tousle-haired, tender-hearted, boy-understanding Newt. I thought he was wonderful. I still do. I walk down the road I know so well and look at the corner post and a miracle happens. Newt is there and I am there. People don't set corner posts as well as they used to. Or so it seems to me. We dug them deep then, stood them straight and wired them well. Here I am mooning over the old days and getting all goose-eyed. But I don't care. Some of my tenderest memories are back here on the old farm and with my neighbor Newt Kennedy—certainly the best a boy ever had. And certainly he was the best hay pitcher who ever bent a hickory handle. When Newt'd set his three-tined fork into a mound of timothy and heave at that handle, the handle would bend up and the hay would go, as big at the top as a cherry tree—as thrilling a sight as anybody'd want to see.

No one could sit up with the sick the way Newt could. Ma'd look out the window and say, "There's a lantern coming down the road." It'd be Newt going to sit up with a sick neighbor. The next morning New't be going back dangling the dead lantern. Pa would say, "Homer, holler him in." Sitting at the table, he'd have a cup of coffee and tell us they'd sent for old Mr. Scott's kinfolks. A hush now. . . .

When Newt'd told the news and was ready to start, Pa'd say, "Homer, do you want to help Newt chore? I expect he's kind of tired, sittin' up all night." Pretty soon Newt and I would be walking down the road toward Newt's house, me carrying the lantern.

The rest of the family would be up and we would all sit down to eat. That was nice. You can't chore on an empty stomach. Most people in our section, when they ate, didn't talk; just flew into the food. But the Kennedy family did. There was more table laughing at their house than at any home in the neighborhood. But they managed to be good farmers. And that was what everybody wanted to be—a good farmer. If you were not a good farmer, you might as well move to town and get on the jury panel. That's the way we looked at things. But if you owned land and had money in the bank, then everything else was forgiven.

Life Was Fun—
At the Kennedys

The Kennedys were about an average sized family; two girls and a boy; then there was Grandpa who lived in the L and smoked dogleg. He had been a covered-wagon pioneer and had shot buffaloes and had skinned them with his own hands. On the wall in his room was a skull with a hole. I loved to look up at the skull and the hole and try to get him to say he had shot the buffalo, but he wouldn't quite do that. Sometimes he would ask me if I wanted to help him burn the worms off the black walnut trees. He would take a shovel, fill it with ashes, then wet the ashes with coal oil. Then he'd hold the blazing shovel under the nests; the worms would begin to heave. Sometimes it almost made me sick. But I always wanted to go.

First there was Newt. Everybody called him "Newt." Pa and Ma let me call him that, but they made me call the other neighbors "Mr." Knabb, "Mr." Willhoyte, "Mr." Shell and so on. Even Mr. Shannon, who lived on forty acres and worked out by the day, was called "Mr." Shannon. But everybody called Minnie Kennedy—"Mrs. Kennedy." She had been a "town" girl and hadn't been born on a farm.

Ida was the older girl; she was the prettiest girl in the neighborhood; when there was a voting at a cove oyster supper, Ida always won. She had big blue eyes and brown hair, and the heartiest, loveliest laugh anybody ever had in the world. Also she was the most popular girl in the neighborhood; the boys rode or drove their horses when they went to see her and tied them to the hitch rack; there a horse would stand and gnaw the hitch rack while the boy was in courting Ida.

Lucy was the second girl, not so good-looking as Ida and not so quick with the warm laugh Ida had. But she was the talented one in the family. She was taking Delsarte. No church social, Sunday school picnic, strawberry festival, or box supper was a success unless Lucy spoke a piece. I can see her now at the quilting bee, standing at the head of the room; the women stop work, a hush falls, then Lucy steps forward and makes a bow lower than the quilting frames, comes up slowly and gracefully, and says: "I will endeavor to recite 'Bingen on the Rhine.'" It was considered polite to say, "I will endeavor," instead of blurting out, "I'll recite." She makes one step forward and lifts her eyes above the heads of the people. In a few moments everybody is choked up over the soldier of the Legion dying away off in Algiers and wanting somebody to take a message back to his family. When she finishes—such a hand clapping! Her mother sits there trying to pretend she isn't proud. Everybody knows Lucy is going far. Some day she may even win the state declamation contest.

Harlan was a year older than I was; but much stronger, for I was peaked. Harlan never read a book in his life (except at school, kind of) but that was all right; he knew things I didn't know and could do things I couldn't dream of doing.

The Kennedy home was ten minutes down the road from ours. How many times I've paddled along that road, hurrying when getting near, taking my time coming back. For coming back meant work, endless work it seemed to me. I would help work at the Kennedy's, but it never seemed like work. But ah! at that age nobody wants to work at home. It was hard to work at home; but it was fun to work at Newt's. How many nights I've stayed at the Kennedy home and never did I stay there when it wasn't fun. Summer and winter I've plodded that stretch of road; in winter I got out and helped scoop. For I didn't want a road block between us and the Kennedys'. Sometimes it seemed I was there as much as I was at home. There was always something going on at the Kennedy house! it made ours seem dull. I was not allowed to have a firearm, but Harlan had a muzzle-loading musket that would kick the shoulder off a mule. But that didn't keep us from firing the shoulder-killer. Sometimes at school we would peel off our shirts and show the other boys the black and blue marks. It made us heroes. And never—never—did Newt tell us we couldn't go out and bang away . . . yet Pa wouldn't let me keep a gun on the place.

Ida was the older girl; she was the prettiest girl in the neighborhood; when there was a voting at a cove oyster supper, Ida always won.

More Memories—
Not All Pleasant

No girls at our house, so, in a way, Ida and Lucy were my sisters. They were both older and to me, tremendously glamorous. Especially Ida, who had so many beaus.

Softie, indeed. Sometimes in this harsh world it doesn't hurt a person to lean a little to the sentimental.

So now I am at "home"; for that is what the old farm, the old neighborhood and the old neighbors are. I like to walk down the road by myself—walk between the osage hedgerows and the cornfields and the lespedeza—and look in reality at the things burned so deep in my memory. But it is not all pleasant. For instance, there is a sight that takes my heart and squeezes till my heart hurts. For this is the slough where Newt dug a ditch to help carry off the surface water. The grass was slough grass; a plow had never been set in it. It wasn't much of a ditch; really just a slit in the ground, five inches wide and a quarter of a mile long. That five inches was the width of a tiling spade. But the ground was laid open like a wound; and the ground began to "wash"—"erode" we later learned to call it. That little five-inch ditch is now a monstrous, angry gully; the black loam is going steadily—every day, every rain—into the Gulf of Mexico.

And the geographical location, for those who may wish to know, is northwest Missouri. It is in the great corn-producing section—the black loam belt.

I turn out, cars whiz by me, and I think of the first car I ever saw pound along the road; and I think of the horses it scared till they shook and I think of what the farmers said—which was enough to make the drivers shake.

There is the house. Yes, the Kennedy mansion; for their house was bigger and finer than ours. It had two stories; ours one. And theirs had two porches; one in front and one behind. How many hours I've sat on that front porch and turned the ice-cream freezer. That yellow trim that used to look so nice . . . well, some of it's loose; certainly all of it is dingy; up yonder in the eaves, is a woodpecker hole. One of the lightning rods is out of kilter. Newt would never have allowed that. And the picket fence is shot. I go in. There is the exact spot where the base-burner stood. But now it is a crude-oil burner with not a square inch of isinglass in its ghastly body. How many times I've lain on the floor and gazed into the mysteries of the glowing coals and gone to sleep and been carried upstairs and put to bed.

Unconsciously I glance up at the ceiling and my mind flies back to the quiet Sunday afternoon when the Kennedy family was gone and when Harlan and I crept into the sitting room to get the musket off the wall—on Sunday when no gun was allowed to be fired. Whang! it went off, tearing a hole in the ceiling as big as a sausage cake. I can't think of that moment yet without my soul shriveling to the size of a peanut. I look up. Thank God! no hole now.

There is the table where the old stereoscope lay and beside it the box of "views." How many times I have jiggled the slide-holder back and forth and gazed at "Niagara Falls in the Winter Time," "Our Martyr President's Funeral Procession—President William McKinley," and at "The Buffalo Horse Fair."

Yes, this is the room—the very room—that my heart goes flying back to, for once I lived and died in this room. And Newt did too, I think. I would like to say this was the first time I remember my neighbor, but I can't, for I can no more remember the first time I saw Newt than I can my own father. He was always, just as my father was. And he would always be, just as my father would. . . . But certainly the incident I am preparing to relate was almost the first to make a vivid impression on me.

A Body Is Found;
Epidemic Strikes Close

I'll call it the Vaccinating. For that is what we called it. And here it is, as it comes winging back to me through the years. Yes, getting old. But not in memory. That is very new and bright, indeed. And precious.

I am shocked, as I look back across the valley of years, to remember how crude were our medical accommodations but it never occurred to us they were crude; in fact, we were thankful we were so fortunate and got along so well.

Smallpox was what we dreaded most. When it struck, there were stories of people being buried at night; and of a father carrying a child in a coffin on his shoulder because no one would go near; then burying the child alone.

One day smallpox struck close and terrifyingly. A farmer climbed the ladder into his mow to hay the horses and there was a dead man. The coroner was sent for; the neighbors stood around waiting and talking. The coroner made an examination, then went away as fast as he could and brought back the county doctor. The body was got out of haymow and taken to the paupers' plot.

And now, in no time at all, everybody had to be vaccinated. But this had been done before, so our people knew how to go about it. A man was chosen from every neighborhood to go to town, get the antitoxin and have the county doctor show him how to vaccinate.

Usually the same person in a neighborhood did the vaccinating each time, but our man had moved away, so Newt was chosen. I can imagine (now that I am older and possibly a little wiser) how he dreaded to go and yet how much he wanted to go.

Effective Cough Syrup, Mixed at Home for Economy
No Cooking. No Work. Real Saving.
Here's an old home mixture your mother probably used, and is still one of the most effective for coughs due to colds. Once tried, you'll swear by it.
Make a syrup with 2 cups granulated sugar and one cup water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Now put 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of cough medicine, and gives you about four times as much for your money. It keeps perfectly and tastes fine.
And you'll say it's really excellent for quick action. You can feel it take hold swiftly. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, helps clear the air passages. Thus it makes breathing easy and lets you get restful sleep.
Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action on throat and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if not pleased in every way.

COCONUT CRANBERRY PIE

Tint the coconut pale green. Against its background of ruby red cranberries, it will be as lovely a Christmas pie as Jack Horner ever pulled a plum out of.

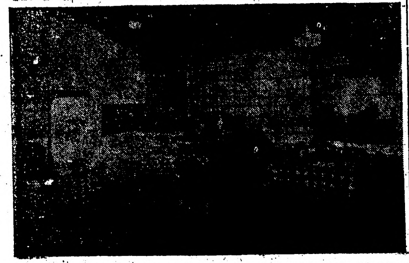
- 1 package prepared vanilla pudding
- 2 cups milk
- 1 cup shredded coconut, cut
- 1 baked 8 or 9-inch pie shell
- 1¼ cups canned whole cranberry sauce
- ¼ cup water
- ½ package (3½ tablespoons) orange-flavored gelatin

Place pudding powder in saucepan. Add milk gradually, stirring constantly. Cook and stir until mixture comes to a boil and is thickened. Add ½ cup of the coconut. Cool slightly (about 5 minutes), stirring once or twice. Turn into pie shell. Cool thoroughly.

Combine cranberry sauce and water in saucepan, cook and stir until mixture comes to a boil. Remove from heat. Add gelatin and stir until dissolved. Chill until thickened. Spread over thoroughly cooled filling. Chill.

For Christmas tree garnish, cut a tree stencil from paper, place on pie, and fill open space with remaining coconut to form tree.

Today's Kitchen Is Attractive and Efficient



Plaids for eye-appeal, cupboards for convenience keynote this compact kitchen. The cabinets come in a variety of styles and may be installed independently. Wooden cabinets are easily painted any color after installation.

BECAUSE the kitchen is not only the homemaker's principal workroom but the heart of the home as well, it must not only be efficient but attractive as well, the Rural Home editor of nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer points out.

Appliances—the supporting cast to the homemaker's star-role—have been vastly improved, she writes. They make work easier, cleaner and save time. Ranges, refrigerators and sinks have been precision-built. They include automatic features that take over much tedious responsibility and give improved results.

"Much of our modern equipment in kitchens is being installed rather than built in," she declares. "Some manufacturers of ranges and refrigerators now have kitchen units complete with various types of cabinets and base units. These may be installed or removed independently of other pieces in the same room. When an entire kitchen cannot be purchased outright, it may be gotten a piece at a time. These units may be grouped in almost any number of arrangements, depending on size of family, the kitchen and the pocketbook."

A workable kitchen must have each piece of equipment placed in relation to other pieces, she adds. Then work moves smoothly and easily with a minimum of wasted effort.

Dear Home Folks:

Just read your Holt Weekly News and it surely makes us feel at home reading about your Christmas and New Years gatherings. It sounds like old times.

On Nov. 19th we were honored by our children on our 25th wedding anniversary. The well planned evening was spent playing cards and games. Refreshments were served, and prizes were all of silver. Then we opened our gifts and movies were taken of everyone followed by a delicious lunch and the cutting of a three tiered wedding cake. We received many lovely gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Gene Brule, Tom and Jerry, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Armour, Janice Mae, Palmer Jr. and Dona sbonsored the party. There were 19 other guests.

This is one anniversary that will long be remembered. Hope we can make our 50th as happy.

Well, we want to say hello to all you good people and when you are in Minneapolis stop in and see us.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Udstrand.

Mrs. John Hagberg spent a week at the Jesse Sorum home at Grand Forks. While there she attended the wedding of Lois Walsky of Kensal, N. D. and her grandson Jerome Sorum of Grand Forks at the Immanuel Lutheran church there on Dec. 31 at 4:30 o'clock. A reception was held at the Golden Hour Cafe following the ceremony.

Sheriff and Mrs. O. C Toftner of Warren were Holt callers Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Ness and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fricker visited at the Orris Harstad home at Newfolden Friday evening.

Is Your Card On File?

Individual doners as well as communities and counties receive credit on the records for their support of the Christmas Seal program, it is reported by Geo. Pauluk, local Christmas Seal chairman.

Mr. Pauluk said an accurate record of all contributions is kept at the Minnesota Public Health Association headquarters in St. Paul.

"There is a card on file for every giver," he stated. "A business-like accounting is made of all receipts, and our county is credited with 55 per cent of the sum collected here. This 55 per cent finances our own county's tuberculosis program, while 40 per cent helps pay costs of statewide health projects to aid all counties. The remaining five per cent goes to the National Tuberculosis association."

The chairman revealed that reports on state returns in the 1949 Christmas Seal sale are not yet available, as payments for Seals are still coming in. "Apparently many people didn't get around to sending their money until the holiday rush was over," he commented, "as returns began coming in again right after the first of the year."

Persons wishing to help support the year-around TB program are urged to send their contributions at once.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Luoto of Thief River Falls and Mr. and Iver Larson were Sunday visitors at the Ernest Nelson home at Gatzke.

Boy Scout Week Feb. 6 to 12

Boy Scout Week, Feb. 6 to 12, marking the 40th anniversary of the incorporation of the Boy Scouts of America, will find the organization at its all time high active membership. Indications are that our Dec. 31st membership figures will show nearly 2,500,000 boys and adult leaders enrolled in the Movement. Since 1910, more than 16,500,000 American boys and men have been identified with the Boy Scouts of America.

Scouting is strong in those communities where civic-minded individuals and institutions not only show an interest in the youth of the community but do something about it with effective support from the press. We invite your assistance in futhering Scouting in your area.

The Boy Scouts will hold their second National Jamboree at historic Valley Forge, Pa., where 40,000 will camp together from June 30 to July. The Local Council can tell you its preliminary plans to take part in this great event.

Albert Neilson visited Melvin Leiran, who has been very ill the past three weeks, on Monday. Mr. Neilson called in behalf of the local Legion Post.

Barney Peterson was taken suddenly ill Monday and was taken to a hospital where he is being treated for pneumonia.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Bren and children of Thief River Falls visited at the Mrs. Paul Olson home Sunday.

Otter Tales

By Reddy Kilowatt

How are you doing on those New Year's resolutions? I guess we're just about far enough into 1950 for many of them to have been conveniently forgotten. But we're not too far along for me to wish you another (if a little late) very Happy New Year!

I imagine this year, too, a lot of people will ask who I am. Every once in a while some one does, so this month I'd like to take a short paragraph to tell you. I'm the symbol of electric service for the business-managed electric light and power companies in the United States.

You'll find me on hand wherever these business-managed firms are on the job supplying you with electricity for light, heat and power. I do my best to be a cheerful, willing servant, putting in long hours for low wages. Even when knocked out by terrific obstacles, you'll find me bouncing back on the job just as fast as humanly possible. When it comes right down to it, I'm just a sort of "front man" for all the hard working men and women who work for you in firms like the Otter Tail Power Company.

Another of my jobs is reminding you from time to time of the many jobs that electricity can do for you. Furnishing you with all the hot water you need right around-the-clock is one of these, and believe me, you can have hot water more economically, more efficiently, when you use electricity to do the work.

I've noticed in travelling along the high lines that a lot of homes where I work are still pretty "old," electrically speaking. Many of the homes are new in years, but they're really "dated" by their electric wiring.

There's the "Gay Nineties" type where a single drop cord or outlet in a room is my only work space, and where a single circuit still carries all the work of the house. Or there's the first World War type, where thickets of extension cords make one outlet do the work of several, of course, at the cost of lots of replaced fuses.

The really modern home, electrically speaking, is one which won't be outdated even ten years from now. It starts with an adequate service entrance, plenty of circuits to carry the load thoughout the house, and plenty of outlets and switch controls.

Correct wiring is an improvement that adds positive, lasting value to your home. It means an end to snarled-up extension cords, unsightly "Octopus" plugs, and fuse-failure worries.

With adequate wiring, see how much better your present appliances work and how much handier they are to use. You'll find me doing an even better job, more efficiently, and (this is important) more economically, too.

Dear Home Folks:

Just read your Holt Weekly News and it surely makes us feel at home, reading about your Christmas and New Years gatherings. It sounds like old times.

On Nov. 19th we were honored by our children on our 25th wedding anniversary. The well planned evening was spent playing cards and games. Refreshments were served, and prizes were all of silver. Then we opened our gifts and movies were taken of everyone followed by a delicious lunch and the cutting of a three tiered wedding cake. We received many lovely gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Gene Brule, Tom and Jerry, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Armour, Janice Mae, Palmer Jr., and Dona sbonsored the party. There were 19 other guests.

This is one anniversary that will long be remembered. Hope we can make our 50th as happy.

Well, we want to say, hello to all you good people and when you are in Minneapolis stop in and see us.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Udstrand.

Mrs. John Hagberg spent a week at the Jesse Sorum home at Grand Forks. While there she attended the wedding of Lois Walsky of Kensal, N. D. and her grandson Jerome Sorum of Grand Forks at the Immanuel Lutheran church there on Dec. 31 at 4:30 o'clock. A reception was held at the Golden Hour Cafe following the ceremony.

Sheriff and Mrs. O. C Toftner of Warren were Holt callers Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Ness and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fricker visited at the Orris Harstad home at Newfolden Friday evening.

COCONUT CRANBERRY PIE

Tint the coconut pale green. Against its background of ruby red cranberries, it will be as lovely a Christmas pie as Jack Horner ever pulled a plum out of.

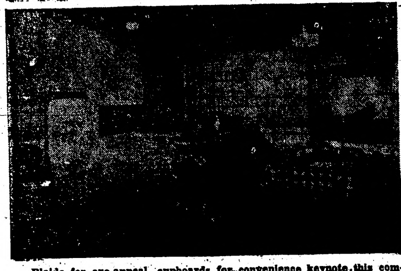
- 1 package prepared vanilla pudding
- 2 cups milk
- 1 cup shredded coconut, cut
- 1 baked 8 or 9-inch pie shell
- 1¼ cups canned whole cranberry sauce
- ½ cup water
- ½ package (3½ tablespoons) orange-flavored gelatin

Place pudding powder in saucepan. Add milk gradually, stirring constantly. Cook and stir until mixture comes to a boil and is thickened. Add ½ cup of the coconut. Cool slightly (about 5 minutes), stirring once or twice. Turn into pie shell. Cool thoroughly.

Combine cranberry sauce and water in saucepan, cook and stir until mixture comes to a boil. Remove from heat. Add gelatin and stir until dissolved. Chill until thickened. Spread over thoroughly cooled filling. Chill.

For Christmas tree garnish, cut a tree stencil from paper, place on pie, and fill open space with remaining coconut to form tree.

Today's Kitchen Is Attractive and Efficient



Plaids for eye-appeal, cupboards for convenience keynote this compact kitchen. The cabinets come in a variety of styles and may be installed independently. Wooden cabinets are easily painted any color after installation.

BECAUSE the kitchen is not only the homemaker's principal workroom but the heart of the home as well, it must not only be efficient but attractive as well, the Rural Home editor of nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer points out.

Appliances—the supporting cast to the homemaker's star role—have been vastly improved, she writes. They make work easier, cleaner and save time. Ranges, refrigerators and sinks have been precision-built. They include automatic features that take over much tedious responsibility and give improved results.

"Much of our modern equipment in kitchens is being installed rather than built in," she declares. "Some manufacturers of ranges and refrigerators now have kitchen units complete with various types of cabinets and base units. These may be installed or removed independently of other pieces in the same room. When an entire kitchen cannot be purchased outright, it may be gotten a piece at a time. These units may be grouped in almost any number of arrangements, depending on size of family, the kitchen and the pocketbook."

A workable kitchen must have each piece of equipment placed in relation to other pieces, she adds. Then work moves smoothly and easily with a minimum of wasted effort.

Sold on Artificial Breeding!

MILACA FARMER'S HERD AVERAGE JUMPS 3,654 LBS. IN 2 YEARS

"I haven't had a bull on my farm since 1943," says Art Thilquist, Rt. 2, Milaca, Minn. For 6 years he has been on a program of artificial breeding with the North Central Dairy Breeders Association, which is affiliated with the Land O'Lakes Herd Improvement Division.

In 1946-47, Thilquist's herd average was 8,036 pounds of milk and 266.8 pounds of butterfat per cow. For 1948-49, the average was 11,690 pounds of milk and 398.2 pounds of butterfat!

In 1949, sixteen of Thilquist's Holsteins were settled to eight different bulls from among 33 proven and superior sires maintained at the Land O'Lakes Herd Improvement farm to provide top-notch service for 37 member cooperative associations.

For information on how you can share in benefits of this artificial breeding program—just one of many Land O'Lakes services to dairymen—write the Herd Improvement Division, Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., Minneapolis 13, Minn.

Is Your Card On File?

Individual doners as well as communities and counties receive credit on the records for their support of the Christmas Seal program, it is reported by Geo. Pauluk, local Christmas Seal chairman.

Mr. Pauluk said an accurate record of all contributions is kept at the Minnesota Public Health Association headquarters in St. Paul.

"There is a card on file for every giver," he stated. "A business-like accounting is made of all receipts, and our county is credited with 55 per cent of the sum collected here. This 55 per cent finances our own county's tuberculosis program, while 40 per cent helps pay costs of state-wide health projects to aid all counties. The remaining five per cent goes to the National Tuberculosis association."

The chairman revealed that reports on state returne in the 1949 Christmas Seal sale are not yet available, as payments for Seals are still coming in.

"Apparently manypeople didn't get around to sending their money until the holiday rush was over," he commented, "as returns began coming in again right after the first of the year."

Persons wishing to help support the year-around TB program are urged to send their contributions at once.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Luoto of Thief River Falls and Mr. and Iver Larson were Sunday visitors at the Ernest Nelson home at Gatzke.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Gunstenson and Gary visited relatives at Fisher on Sunday.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

Tears glistened in his eyes as Homer Croy drove along the country road amid the scenes of his childhood. A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, he was going "home"—back to the Kennedy place where he had had such fun as a child. He remembered the happy times he had with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he had ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their two girls, Lucy and Ida, like older sisters to him; Harlan, his childhood playmate. Then he remembered, but with terrifying vividness, the vaccinating by Newt and the tensity that moved over the people. For smallpox, the thing they dreaded most, threatened, a tramp having been found dead of the disease.

CHAPTER II

The grown-up people had been vaccinated, so now the children. I can see us children going toward the house, all knowing something dreadful was going to happen; but our fathers and mothers were taking us, so everything must be all right.

I see the overshoes on the porch, the door opening and shutting, the people sitting in the kitchen, the tracks on the floor; I smell the lovely intoxicating odor of melted sugar and popcorn.

Usually the children romped at Newt's heels, but not today; they sense something is wrong. He tries to be friendly, but they edge away.

The men come up from the barn lot; they don't go in the house but stand outside, talking in low tones.

Ida and Lucy move here and there, looking after the young children. Grandpa sits behind the kitchen stove.

Newt takes off his coat, dips water out of the reservoir, washes his hands and dries them on the roller towel.

He pretends to be cheerful, "Well, boys and girls! we've got a little business to attend to, but it won't take long and won't hurt much and it'll soon be over."

He goes into the sitting room, but instead of its usual cheerful appearance the room is bare except for a table, some glasses, cotton batting and a drugstore box. By the side of the table are two empty, ominous chairs.

"Who wants to be first?" he asks.

Nobody wants to be first; in fact no one wants to be at all. But the crowd, the occasion, the intensity, the importance—these can no more be resisted than wind from the north.

"It's not going to hurt," says the liar.

A terrified girl is coaxed into one of the chairs and Newt sits down in front of her and tries to smile. He pats her and tells her she is a nice girl, but she is not deceived. Trouble is coming. And it does come, for he begins to roll up her left sleeve; there is her white arm and it is trembling and so—I verily believe now that I am older and have a child of my own—is Newt.

A tense, heavy-breathing silence falls over all, back and forth the scratcher goes, blood rolls down the white arm. And now the most trying moment of all. Newt picks up one of the "points" made out of white bone about the size of a steel pen and shaped somewhat like it. Broad and rounded at one end, tapered at the other. Ah! I have no trouble seeing it. Nor feeling it, either. For I carry its scar today.

'A Stranger In Our Midst'

On the end was the "medicine." Into the living flesh he thrusts the point and holds it there, moving it and wiping it so the virus will come off. Then drops it into the coal bucket. Now it's time for the bandage and time for the little girl to cry. It is all right to cry afterward, but if you are brave you won't cry until all is over.

One after another, the children go up to Newt who is no longer trying to be cheerful. Then comes my time and I go up and I die . . . or so it seems.

At last it is all over; there is a spatter of white bones in the coal bucket; the children are going about with their left arms drawn up. The men come in from the outside and there is laughing and talking; and now the fathers find chairs and get to hold the children on their laps. Mrs. Kennedy takes the dishpan from the top of the range and strips the cover off the pan—it is filled with pink-colored, sugar-coated popcorn, heavenly balls. In a moment we each have a ball in our right hand and are gnawing away like puppies at bones. Newt goes anxiously from child to child, making friendly advances.

Time to go home. The men who had so quietly tied their teams, now untie them, calling back and forth to each other as they do so. Newt goes from buggy to buggy and from child to child just to make sure he is forgiven. He is. No one could really hold out against friendly, understanding Newt.

The next day we are in school again; no rough games now. No running games; no prisoner's base, no anteover.

Yes, I am shocked, as I look back, but none of us ever suffered greatly from our vaccination. Some of us developed unduly sore arms, but that was all. Later, I had the smallpox and was taken to the pesthouse, but Newt had done his work well, for I had what was called "varioloid" and came out with only one mark on my face.

Our farmers were a sort of aristocracy of the soil. They had always lived on their farms; they always expected to. Sometimes, however, a farmer decided to "retire," move to town and "take it easy." But, when he got to town, there was nothing to do. He would come downtown and sit on a park bench in the courthouse yard and watch the teams go by. At noon he would walk slowly home; after dinner he would walk slowly downtown again. He would go into the harness store and talk to Mr. Wadley. After a while he would be on the park bench again, watching the teams go by. It was hard work. He soon died.

There was always tremendous interest when a farm "changed hands." This meant a new neighbor was coming in. Usually this person was from another school district, or another township, or another county. Sometimes a farmer crossed the line from Iowa. Sometimes a farmer moved in from Nebraska, mostly from the hardpan section. But this wasn't often. Most of the farms changed hands to people we knew.

Behind the poor farm was a miserable, run-down, horse-weed-ridden farm of forty acres. It was most unusual to have a farm of this number of acres, for farms are not so divided. It had this strange number of acres because the county had bought a farm for its inmates and there had been this much left over. Nobody wanted to buy it because it was too small. In addition, it was situated behind the poor farm; the house was so far back you couldn't see it from the road. There was a wooden gate, that led to the house; you had to get out and open the gate, then shut and wire it behind you. The farm was what we called "in litigation"; no one wanted to buy a farm where the heirs were fighting. Also the farm was run down; gullies big enough to throw a henhouse into. The house was run down, too.

We heard the farm had "changed hands." That was all anyone knew. Then came the news it had changed hands to a "foreigner."

There were no foreigners in our section. Sometimes a family had a grandpa or grandma who spoke with a German or a Swedish accent; that was all.

Then came the startling news that the farm had changed hands to a Russian. None of us had ever seen a Russian; all we knew was that they threw their brides out of their sleighs to the wolves. We didn't want that to get started in our neighborhood.

A Welcome Party For the 'Foreigners'

When he moved in he had his things on a two-wheeled wagon drawn by one horse. The horse had big brass hames and over the hames was an arch. None of us had ever seen such a way of doing; nor even heard of such a way. Our people, when they moved onto a new farm, had big two-horse wagons and, sometimes, had to take two or three loads.

The last thing in the world we wanted was an outlandish man like that living in our neighborhood. Trying to farm with one horse! It would take at least two horses, even for a farm of that size. But there he was with one horse and several children. On top of this he had a queer beard and wore a fur thing on his head that was about halfway between a hat and a cap.

We found his name was Delinsky. He may really have been a Pole, but to us he was a "Rooshan."

Mr. Willhoyte went over to ask if there was anything he could do for him. The man looked at him fiercely and made him understand that he didn't want anything to do with him.

Other things came to light. He made his wife work in the fields. None of our farmers ever made their wives do that.

We found out also that he sometimes teamed a cow with his horse. That was the lowest yet. The worst thing that had ever happened to our section was when this Anton Delinsky moved in.

The oldest was a boy named Leonard who seemed as strange and eccentric as his father. The oldest girl was Lizzie; she started at our school. She had tremendous brass earrings; her hair was in plaits and she wore boots. No girl wore high-topped boots to school; the boys did, but not the girls. She didn't have a tin dinner bucket, as the rest of us had, but brought her eating in a brown paper parcel. At noon we stared at the outlandish things that came out of that brown paper parcel; we laughed and snickered.

All our people didn't go to church, but no one would have dreamed of working on the Sabbath unless it was to save a crop. But Anton Delinsky got out his horse and single-shovel and plowed on Sunday.

They went to town in their ridiculous one-horse wagon with the brass hames and the big arch, and tied to the hitch racks. People walked by just to see the contraption. Anton Delinsky, with his wife and his children, walked up and down the street together as if afraid to separate. They spoke to no one; hardly anyone spoke to them.

The word got out to have nothing to do with them.

Then Newt announced he was going to give them a Welcome Party. This was always done when a new family moved in; but the Delinskys were not the kind of people we wanted to welcome. It would be better if they pulled out. But Newt's kindness of heart and his friendliness toward everybody made him go ahead.

The neighbors were given the news, but they held back. It was just as well not to encourage the Delinskys.

Lizzie was told the plans; the family was to come on a certain night. Lizzie didn't seem to understand very well.

It was the custom for the family, in whose honor the party was given, to wait and come in last; this made it a kind of ceremony. Lots of laughing and good feeling, then.

Suspense hung over the household like August heat over a cornfield. Chores were done early, the family scrambled about getting dressed.

Ida looked out the window and said, "There's a lantern coming."

It was early; maybe it was one of the neighbors coming to help with the work.

We saw it was the Delinskys. We looked at each other, flabbergasted; when they came in there were Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky and Lizzie and Leonard (which was the number we had expected) and three small children; and Mrs. Delinsky was carrying a baby in her arms.

The Party Proves A Painful Ordeal

People never brought a baby to a party and, for that matter, they didn't bring small children, either; these were left at home with Grandpa or Grandma. But there was no Grandpa or Grandma in the Delinsky family; and they didn't know any neighbor they could get to come in and stay with the children, so here they were.

Newt and Mrs. Kennedy went heartily forward, but they couldn't talk to them; the Delinskys stood with their children staring at the sitting room and not saying a word.

Finally, after a great deal of pointing and gesturing and sign making, an old cradle was hauled out and a place fixed for it in the downstairs bedroom; then, without saying a word, the queer Delinskys pulled chairs back, placed them in a row against the wall and sat down as stiffly as if in church.

The Delinskys were in the way during the last-minute rush, but they didn't seem to know this; just sat and stared at everything in the room.

People began arriving; they blew out their lanterns and set them in a row on the front porch. Mrs. Kennedy tried to introduce the silent Delinskys; each time the Delinskys would say something in a foreign language, then again stare silently around the room. Lizzie was asked to interpret, but was so ill at ease that she made a bad job of it and, finally, Newt and Minnie gave up trying to use her.

Leonard, in his ridiculous clothes, sat gazing silently at Ida because of her good looks. But Ida didn't want anything to do with such an oddity.

Only once did Mr. and Mrs Delinsky show the slightest interest in what was going on; this was when one of the neighbors arrived with a basket of food. Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky glanced at each other . . . then again stared silently around the room.

Their presence threw a pall over everybody; now and then one of the neighbors would make friendly advances, but got no encouragement. The people talked about crops, the price of hogs and who was sick, but without the deep interest these subjects always had. For there were the silent, crazy foreigners.

Hobnobbing High

The father of our country was a lover of ice cream. During the summer of 1790 George Washington bought $200 worth of ice cream on Chatham street in New York. This was the site of many of the first ice cream shops. General Washington brought home from Philadelphia a "cream machine for making ice" and owned "two pewter ice cream pots."

Railroads Protect Possessions

The problem of surface protection is very important to railroads. Finishes must be applied not only for beauty and decoration, but for protection as well. Generally speaking, signals are painted every year; passenger cars every three years; bridges every five years; and freight cars every eight to ten years.

Egg Quality

The albumen of the egg which is secreted by the glands of the oviduct is germicidal and retards the development of most bacteria. As a result, most eggs are aseptic when first laid, however, subsequent methods of handling of the eggs frequently result in contamination and thus lowered quality.

Plant Exhibit

Two new exhibits have been installed at the New York Botanical garden, and both deal directly or indirectly with plants sought by explorers in widespread tropical regions, some of which are sources of both medicines and poisons.

Robin Red Breast

Originally the robin was a forest-nesting bird. With the clearing away of the woodlands it has learned to build nests almost everywhere—on fence rails, gate posts, window ledges, tombstones, even charge trolley wires.

Farm Equipment

Fit machinery to the needs of the farm business. Before investing in an expensive piece of new equipment, check to make sure that you really need it. Sometimes farmers go together to buy expensive machines and trade work during the season.

Swine Lung Worms

Because there is no medical treatment for lung worms in swine, the best way to keep these parasites out of the pig crop is to raise the pigs on concrete floors or on grounds not used in recent years by older swine.

Dandelion Salad

A favorite dish in the French province of Champagne is dandelion and bacon salad. According to connoisseurs, proper preparation requires long stirring in a salad bowl resting on warm ashes.

Sound Effect

When you hear the slow, stealthy opening of a creaking door on a radio thriller program, do you know how the sound effect is achieved? With paint—heavily applied to the hinges of a real door.

Paint's Span

Ordinarily, exterior paints last longer on woods such as redwood and western red cedar than they do on resinous woods, such as yellow pine and Douglas fir.

Burning Trash

When burning winter trash be sure to lay the fire in an open space on bare ground so that trees and shrubs will not be scorched by the heat given off.

Dried Fruits

Dried fruits often are less expensive than their equivalents canned or frozen. They also take up less space and are easy to store.

To The Cleaners

Dry-cleaners urge us all to search pockets before sending clothes to be cleaned. Lipstick particularly can cause trouble; it discolors clothes during cleaning.

Chicks Need Water

Don't neglect the chickens' drinking water on cold days. Production will fall unless the birds have access to water at all times.

Protection

Protect yourself against emergencies, crop failures, disease in herd and flock sickness or accident in family.

Avoid Alligatoring

Sometimes breaks appear in the surface of a paint coating in a pattern which rather resembles the appearance of an alligator hide. This is called "alligatoring" and is usually caused by the application of hard finishing coats over a soft primer—especially before the primer has thoroughly dried. A priming coat should be allowed to dry thoroughly. It should always be as hard or harder than the outer coats.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by ROGER C. WHITMAN

Dividing A Large Room

QUESTION: We have a large spare bedroom that we would like to divide so that we can make another room out of it. There are only two windows. We have thought of large Venetian blinds and also heavy drapes on a long rod. Do you have any other idea? I want to avoid expense and mess and dirt.

ANSWER: It all depends on how much privacy you want. You would not get much privacy with a Venetian blind or draperies. I believe you would find it more practical to put up studding on which you can nail up a wallboard. For ventilation in the summertime, you could have some of the panels movable, so that if desired, they can be taken out for better circulation of air. You may need to put in another window or two.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

As we get older, stress and strain, overexertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.

If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While these symptoms may often otherwise occur, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

British Election Set February 23; Seek Anti-Trust Law for Miners; Conflict Seen on Proposed Budget

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

TRIO WILL CHART RENT CONTROL, HOUSING . . . With rent control and housing two major items on the agenda of the current congressional session, these legislators will play a major part in law-making activities. They are, left to right, Chairman Brent Spence (D., Ky.) of the house banking committee; Chairman Burnet Maybank (D., S. C.) of the senate banking committee, and Sen. John Sparkman (D., Ala.) member of the senate banking Committee. They are shown after conferring with President Truman on rent control and federal housing aid.

ELECTION:
Britain's Choice

In a little less than a month Britain's voting populace will make an elective decision on the issue of whether to continue with socialism, state planning and nationalization of industry under the present Labor government or to return to free enterprise with Winston Churchill's Conservative party.

In setting February 23 as the date for the general election, Prime Minister Clement Attlee must have been acutely aware that this will be far and away the most bitterly contested and momentous election in modern British history.

Britain's 33 million voters will elect a new house of commons, with the party seating the majority of candidates getting the right to form the government.

Speculation was high as to whether defeats within the past two months by the Labor parties in both Australia and New Zealand could be taken as a straw in the wind, insofar as the outcome in England is concerned. Most informed opinion had it that it would be dangerous to predict a downfall of Atlee's government on the basis of the "down under" elections.

Chief reason for this thinking was that the Labor party very recently had been able to show signs of substantial gains in Britain's fight to overcome poverty.

BIG STICK:
Union Monopolies

Virtually everyone from busboy to bureaucrat probably has, at one time or another, discussed the question of whether the tactics used by some of the larger unions—particularly John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers—in securing benefits for their members do not constitute a monopoly in restraint of trade.

ON CAPITOL HILL that issue had been presented more forcefully than ever before when 10 senators—seven Democrats and three Republicans—sent to the senate judiciary committee a report stating that a bill forbidding labor to monopolize control of industry would end the "usurpation and abuse of power" such as currently is being demonstrated by Lewis' three-day work week in the soft coal mines.

The 10 senators were members of the senate banking committee, which had been investigating the problem of the miners' short work week but which had no power to take legislative action in that economic area.

THE REPORT pointed out that "If this usurpation and abuse of power to control production and price is tolerated by the congress, its unbridled use will spread from union to union, from industry to industry, and the congress will never again regain its own narrowly circumscribed power to control the economy of the nation consistently with the Constitution of the United States."

Soviet Walkout

It has been evident for a long time that Russia wants to eliminate China's Nationalist government, both from the Chinese and international scenes, and is sparing no effort to achieve that end.

IN ADDITION to the military pressure exerted by the Chinese Communists, the Soviets had turned on the heat in the United Nations in a continuing attempt to get the Nationalist delegation discredited in the security council.

Latest development along those lines came when Russia's Jacob Malik wrathfully stomped out of a security council meeting because the other delegates would not kick out the Nationalist representation.

And, said Malik, he would not return to the council as long as the Nationalists sat at the table. Meetings with them present would be a parody, he asserted. And the chief Nationalist delegate, T. F. Tsiang, who was presiding as January chairman over the first council meeting this year, "represents nobody," Malik concluded.

U.S. BUDGET:
No Balance

Mr. Truman's federal budget for the fiscal year starting July 1 was not surprising. It was unbalanced, calling for the government to live more than five billion dollars beyond its income during the year—if congress doesn't pare the figures, or give the President the "moderate" tax hikes he has proposed.

THE OVERALL BUDGET figure was 42 billion, 439 thousand dollars, but Mr. Truman declared the proposed spending "vital to our security . . . and to the welfare of our people."

As was to be expected, Mr. Truman insisted the budget was one of soundest prudence and restraint. He argued that it was a financial expression the steps the government ought to take now "to build toward economic growth and the expansion of human freedom in our own country and in the world."

National defense continued to be the biggest expense in the budget, although expansively covered in that is the money being spent in an effort to insure Europe against any further spread of communism.

An ironical twist was the fact that while the U. S. is pouring money into Great Britain as a part of that general effort, the British turn right around and give aid and comfort to communism by formally recognizing the Communists.

AS FOR TAX INCREASES, the President was silent on specific recommendations. He did, however, indicate that he would like an earlier date for imposition of an increase in social security taxes from one and one-half per cent to two per cent on employers and employees. The President apparently wanted that extra money to aid a health-insurance plan, which congress seems to have little intention of approving.

RED STUPIDITY REACHES NADIR

Soviets Claim U.S. College Girls Spies

There appeared no end to the absurdity to which Moscow would go in screaming to the world about how it is being imposed upon by low-lifed, unprincipled spies. The latest frenzy of the Soviets in that sphere was directed at the Swiss branch of Smith college for women at Geneva. According to charges from Moscow, American girls at this school are being trained for anti-Soviet spy work.

This spy work, the accusation went on, was to be performed in the Communist-dominated countries of East Europe. A large group of Smith girls are at the Hotel de Russie, studying in the center of international affairs. They are chaperoned by a member of the college faculty and apparently have impressed no one else as spies.

Give Us Back Our Sidewalks, Slim!

I wrote that over an article in the Clarion last week, but I didn't like doing it. After all, the man it was aimed at—Slim Henderson—is a good friend of mine.

Slim came into quite a windfall last month, and bought the old Clarke place. The deed gave him title to all the land—right down to the street. Then Slim started to take up the sidewalk to make his lawn look better.

I felt it wasn't fair to the town and said so in my article. Next morning Slim comes around and wants to know what I mean—getting folks riled against him. I felt ornery myself, and we had quite a set-to over the whole business.

From where I sit, that was foolish. Once we'd cooled off (over lunch and a bottle of beer at Andy's Tavern), Slim decided the sidewalk should stay—for the common good and I promised next time I'd take a good look at the other fellow's point of view before writing any articles about him!

Oats Makes Debut
First species of oats are believed to have grown east of the Alps toward Tartary and the Caucasus.

Schuman to Oppose Hagen

Glenn Schuman of Warren, has announced that he will seek Minnesota's Ninth congressional seat on the Democratic-Farmer-Labor ticket. The incumbent is Republican Harold Hagen of Crookston.

Schuman is a farmer and has been active in the Minnesota Farmers Union, Rural Youth organization and Future Farmers of America.

Schuman declared support of the Braunan plan with 100 % parity farm price supports, heavier taxes on big corporations, $100-a-month pensions and a public works program for unemploped.

He attacked the "spending of taxpayers money for fat cost-plus contracts for armaments which go to foreign reactionaries to use against our own people."

— Minneapolis Tribune

Ringbo Rambles

Elvin Saxberg from Roseau was a supper guest at the Pete Becklund home on Thursday evening and overnight guest at the Hughey Engstrom home.

Percy Sorter is now staying at the Pete Sorter home.

Thief River Falls visitors on Friday included Charley and Roger Skoglund, Percy Sorter, Mr. and Mrs. Pete Sorter and Mrs. Carl Knutson.

Clifford Larson spent Saturday evening with Glenn Davidson.

Glenn Davidson is spending a few days at the Milton Davidson home.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Davidson of Middle River were supper guests at the Ed Davidson home Wednesday last week.

Large worries do not shrink in tears, but in smiles.

Worry is like a snowball -- the more you roll it the bigger it gets.

Water for Batteries
Frost on the freezing compartment of electric refrigerators is a good source of pure water for automobile batteries. It has no chemical impurities because it is condensed from moisture in the air.

Your Paper is Worth Reading

Each week the Holt Weekly News comes to you for your pleasure, profit, information or for whatever other use you want to make of it.

But before you can use it for any of these purposes, a good many hours of thought, planning and work have to be put into it.

Your front page, containing the bulk of the week's news that happened in Holt and the surrounding area, is the product of considerable effort by the people in the Holt Weekly News office and our correspondents. As a result, you know pretty much what's going on around our neck of the woods.

Because most weekly newspaper subscribers take a distinct satisfaction in being able to read in their home town publication about subjects of national or international scope — happenings beyond the limits of their particular town— the Holt Weekly News tries to anticipate that demand by bringing its readers the excellent selection of colums, features and pictures provided by Western Newspaper Union's Printed Syndicate Service.

This is interpretive reporting in the form of colums commenting on the political, social and economic scene, written by highly trained, facile reporters. Other articles, strictly on the feature side, appeal to the ladies, while still others are of interest to virtually anyone who will open a newspaper in the first place.

The pictures, you'll find, cover a wide range of human action that has made news in recent days. You'll enjoy them, and they'e exclusive in the Holt Weekly News.

These features, as most of you already have discovered, are intended to inform and entertain. The Holt Weekly News believes they achieve that aim as well or better than comparative material in any of the large metropolitan papers.

Take a look at the inside pages of your newspaper now. The Holt Weekly News is proud to have you do so.

R. T. Buckler Funeral Thurs.

Funeral Services were held last Thursday for R. T. Buckler at Crookston, who died Monday at 85.

Mr. Buckler served 12 years in the Minnesota senate and five terms —1931 to 1941— as congressman from the ninth district.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Gunstenson have as their guest this the former mother from Fisher

Knute Nelson has been ill and had to have a doctor last week.

Poor Tilth
Poor physical condition of the soil, or poor tilth, can hold down yields just as lack of plant food does.

Boy Scout Week Feb. 6 to 12

Boy Scout Week, Feb. 6 to 12, marking the 40th anniversary of the incorporation of the Boy Scouts of America, will find the organization at its all time high active membership. Indications are that our Dec. 31st membership fignres will show nearly 2,500.000 boys and adult leaders enrolled in the Movement. Since 1910, more than 16,500.000 American boys and men have been identified with the Boy Scouts of America.

Scouting is strong in those communities where civic-minded individuals and institutions not only show an interest in the youth of the community but do something about it with effiective support from the press. We invite your assistance in futhering Scouting in your area.

The Boy Scouts will hold their second National Jamboree at historic Valley Forge, Pa., where 40,000 will camp together from June 30 to July. The Local Council can tell you its preliminary plans to take part in this great event.

Fertilizer Bought Now Can Be Safely Stored On Farm Until Spring

BUYING fertilizer now and storing it on your farm this winter is one sure way of having on hand all the plant food you need for the 1950 crop season, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out.

Agricultural economists say such a procedure is particularly advisable right now in view of prospects for a bigger demand for fertilizer in 1950. U. S. Department of Agriculture indicates there may be a rise of from 10 to 25 per cent in the 1950 demand for plant food. So it is important to act promptly if you want to be certain of having plant food when you want it.

Good quality fertilizer can be satisfactorily stored on farms during the winter. It can be kept in good condition until spring planting time, if a few simple precautions are followed. Dr. H. B. Cheney, extension agronomist of Iowa State College, offers these suggestions on winter storage:

1—Store fertilizer sacks only in a barn or some other dry building that has flooring off the ground; 2—If you have to use earth or concrete floors, stack fertilizer bags on a crib of blocks and boards; 3—Keep the piles close together, if sacks are of burlap. This will reduce the circulation of air from which fertilizer may soak up moisture; 4—Prevent caking by piling sacks only seven or eight high; 5—Keep broken bags separate from the main pile. Loose fertilizer soaks up moisture faster than that in a bag.

You'll have plant food for spring use if you buy it now.

Don't Dispose of Aluminum Pans

Misinformation about dangers from aluminum cooking utensils is still circulating, according to Home agent Margaret Nelson.

The American Medical Association, the U. S. Public Health Service and many other authorities agree that aluminum ware is safe. So why, asks Miss Nelson, should Marshall county homemakers discard aluminum pots and pans that have many advantages for cooking and have meant a considerable outlay of money, in favor of other pans that give no better service?

Aluminum is present in ordinary drinking water, in practically all soils and in all foods grown on these soils. From these sources it is present in the human body. One health authority states that the amount of aluminum dissolved in the cooking of food in an aluminum utensil is so small as almost to escape detection. Much more is found in foods as they come from the garden. In any case, it is harmless declares Miss Nelson.

Pointing out that any fear of using aluminum pets and pans is groundless, a bulletin of the Council of Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association makes the statement. "There are still many persons who cling to the old prejudice against aluminum and there are a few who make it a profitable business to keep the prejudice alive. It has been proved over and over that there is no harm in aluminum and that its use for cooking utensils is entirely safe".

Aborted Calf

When a cow loses her calf, owners always should suspect brucellosis as the cause, since approximately 80 per cent of all abortions in cows are due to this disease. However, at least a dozen other diseases and conditions may enter into the abortion picture, and it takes a careful herd examination to determine the exact nature of the trouble. Poisoning, injury, unsound reproductive organs, trichomoniasis, and vibrionic infection are among the factors that may prove to be the real cause.

The First Sundae

Sunday blue-laws caused another milestone in ice cream history. Fearing youngsters were frittering away much of the Lord's Day in soda fountains, town fathers in Evanston, Illinois, outlawed soda selling on the Sabbath. So fountains produced "Sunday soda"—everything but charged water. The idea spread. Soon everybody was eating sundaes.

NEW GIFT KIT FOR TEEN-AGERS INTRODUCED

There is no more welcome gift for the younger set than cosmetics. A new, glamorous, low-budget kit which contains those essentials a young lady needs when she starts to primp and practice with make-up . . . an attractive bottle of cologne, a box of clinging, two-tone face powder and, of course, the indispensable lipstick . . . is now available. This gift kit is a product of famous SEVENTEEN COSMETICS.

Daughter, sister and "best-date" will appreciate this new item not only because it is beautifully wrapped and has its own greeting card tucked in it—but also because the cosmetics themselves are not harmful to tender young skins. SEVENTEEN is often referred to as "The cosmetic of the professional models"—girls who have to apply their own makeup to appear glamorous, use SEVENTEEN products. SEVENTEEN COSMETICS are hypo-allergenic. They are free from ingredients that might irritate the skin and their advertising is accepted for publication in the journals of The American Medical Association.

This new all-year round gift will be shipped prepaid to any part of the country for $2.50. This includes Federal cosmetics tax. Send to

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Attlee Promises 'Better' Socialism; Amvets Support GI Bonus Proposals; U.S. War Potentials Gains Recited

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

This is the Isbrandtsen ship line's "Flying Cloud" as it left its Hoboken pier to run the Chinese Nationalist blockade in Shanghai. It is a sister ship to the "Flying Arrow" which was heavily shelled by Chinese gunboats. The move was being made despite U. S. state department warnings to U. S. ships to stay out of the blockade area. Inset is Captain Nicholas Dervin, skipper of the "Flying Cloud."

GREAT BRITAIN:
Attlee Stands Pat

On the surface, at least, there was no qualms over possible results and certainly no promises of reform as the Labor party in England loudly proclaimed that it would stand for more and "better" socialism if it were returned to power in the February elections.

OBVIOUSLY, the overthrow of the Socialists in Australia and, earlier, in New Zealand, didn't mean a thing to Prime Minister Clement Attlee and his administration.

The party in power in Great Britain laid down its platform in a 6,000-word manifesto. The platform included:

"Wise development" of the administration of government medical services and other welfare services (one of the most hotly-disputed of socialist innovations).

MUTUALIZATION of insurance—that is, ownership by policy-holders.

Jobs for all.

Increase in production, lowering costs and increasing imports.

More and cheaper food.

A home for every family.

No shelter for private enterprise "behind price rings and rigged markets."

EFFORTS FOR PEACE in a "realistic" manner, and willingness to cooperate with Russia, as "with any other country that is prepared to work for peace and friendship."

Strengthening of the association of the commonwealths and the Atlantic pact.

An ambitious program surely and one which must command some measure of respect if only for its declining to retreat in the face of what might seem to be a dangerous situation.

WAR POTENTIAL:
U. S. Gains Cited

While the national committee for aeronautics reported that "it is logical to assume" Russia is working hard to develop superspeed warplanes to deliver atomic weapons, it also reported continuing American gains in the "race for air leadership." The committee called for efforts to "consolidate these gains and push forward."

THE AGENCY reporting is the government's chief organization for basic aviation research and, consequently, should know what it is talking about.

The committee dropped one not-so-cheering note, however, by pointing out that any nation that wants to make the effort can build "practical military airplanes" able to fly faster than sound.

"Superior-speed," the report continued, "is generally acknowledged to be the most important single element in successful air attack and in defense against attack. Range also is important. The attainment of long range poses a most difficult problem."

AND THEN the report's punch line:

"As in the case of the atomic bomb, America cannot expect to enjoy an exclusive advantage—at best it can only plan by vigorous and timely research to stay ahead of any potential enemy . . ."

GIVEAWAY DUE
Potatoes

The government announced it was going to "give away" some of the enormous stocks of potatoes which it bought to keep prices up—but, as usual, there was a catch to it. Not everyone could get the potatoes, and it was not as "free" as it appeared.

THE POTATOES, it appeared, would go only to the school lunch program, the bureau of Indian affairs, public and private welfare agencies in this country and private agencies doing relief abroad. However, that was a move which should elicit no criticism, inasmuch as it savored more of intelligent government in action than most bureaucratic actions.

Here's the catch:

FOR the school lunch, and some private institutions, the "giveaway" program means they will have to start paying something to get potatoes they once got without having to pay out a nickel. The reason for that, it was explained, is that for many years the government had a surplus-crop disposal program, for which congress appropriated funds. This meant commodities could be delivered to schools free.

Now, all that's changed, there is no free-delivery fund, so school lunches will have to pay transportation for its "free" commodities.

VETS' BONUS:
Added Support

The battle lines for the fight to obtain a bonus for veterans of World War II has been strengthened by support from the Amvets, a World War II organization.

Meanwhile, the Veterans of Foreign Wars renewed its long-standing bonus appeal.

THUS, two major veterans' organizations standing shoulder to shoulder on the proposition that the nation should reward their war services with a bonus.

Harold Russell, Amvets national commander, told the house veterans' affairs committee that "by every standard of equity the bonus is justifiable."

Certainly the GI's of Conflict Two had a precedence in the case of the Doughboys of World War I. And, remembering history, they would not be too disappointed at early delays, inasmuch as it took quite a time for the World War I veterans to obtain passage of a bonus bill.

THE AMVETS and the VFW were agreed that the rate of compensation for veterans should be $3 a day for service in this country, and $4 a day for service overseas. This would mean that a maximum bonus would be $4,500, with an extra bonus for men who were wounded in action.

The question of a bonus for men who have defended their country in time of war is one of the most difficult with which a people may wrestle. There is the vast gratitude and appreciation of service on the one hand, and on the other a conception of patriotism and duty, solidified most often by lack of necessary funds with which to reward the warriors.

Little Chance Seen for Major Tax Hike

When a top Democrat in President Truman's administration calls for a three-billion-dollar cut in federal taxes, indications are that Mr. Truman's original plan for a tax hike has been abandoned.

When the President first proposed an increase in taxes, he was in a fighting mood. He had just been elected in his own right as President despite general opinion that he would be defeated, and his tax demands may have been in the manner of a challenge to congress. Since then Mr. Truman appears to have mellowed in his tax ideas.

The tax-slash proposal was made by senate finance committee Chairman George, a Georgia Democrat, who, at the same time, also called for government economy to erase half the anticipated deficit.

Smile Awhile

No Need

A rather well-known Southern lawyer was appointed judge in the district he had served for so many years. One of his first cases was that of an old Negro who was charged with stealing a ham from a rotisserie. It so happened that the judge had defended the old Negro on numerous occasions when he was a lawyer.

"Well, Ras'," the newly-appointed judge observed rather sadly, "I see you're in trouble again."

"Yassuh, boss," agreed the white-haired darky, "but yo' ain't gwine to defen' me dis time, is yo'?"

"No, I'm not. Do you want me to get another lawyer for you?"

"No, suh, thank yo'. I ain't gonna hab a lawyer dis time. I'se gwine to tell de troof."

Naturally

An explorer had been marooned for several weeks in the wilds of Canada. After a month or so of recuperation he was asked to describe his harrowing experiences at a social gathering. One of the ladies asked him:

"How in the world did you ever get home?"

"Well, it was hard sledding," he admitted.

"How is that?" she asked.

"There wasn't any snow," he replied.

Contempt of Court

A lawyer went to a judge to complain that the client for whom he had just won a case refused to pay his fee.

"Did you present your request in writing?" asked the judge.

"Yes, I did, sir," replied the lawyer.

"What did he have to say?" continued the judge.

"He told me to go to the devil," answered the lawyer

"Then what did you do?"

"I then came straight to you, sir."

Lining Box With Heavy Felt

QUESTION: Can you tell me the best kind of glue to use in fastening heavy wool felt to the inside of a plywood box? I want a glue that will spread easily, set fairly fast, and not soak through the felt.

ANSWER: Shellac generally is used for pasting a lining in a silver chest, the lining usually consisting of either velvet or canton flannel. I believe it would serve your purpose also, and it would be easy to obtain. Allow the shellac to become "tacky" before placing the felt.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR
by HOMER CROY

Homer Croy blinked back tears as he drove along the country road amid the scenes of his childhood. An older, wiser man, he was going home—a prodigal son of northwest Missouri returning to places that revived memories. He remembered happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he had ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their two daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his childhood playmate. As he inspects the Kennedy "mansion," now a dingy and drafty ghost out of his past, he recalls the painful "welcome home" party Newt gave for the Delinskys, the "foreigners" who had just purchased the 40-acre farm behind the poor farm.

CHAPTER III

Newt grew more and more uneasy; plainly he had made a mistake.

"I guess we'd better begin," he said as if it were a funeral. "Lucy, can you favor us with a selection?"

Of course she could! That was the very moment she had been waiting for. She came out, made what we considered a graceful bow and said, "I will endeavor to recite 'Captain Jenks,'" then began:

I'm Captain Jenks of the Horse
Marines,
I feed my horse on corn and beans.

In a moment we were all laughing, for no one knew better than we did what to feed a horse; how we clapped when she finished! But Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky sat un-smiling, staring straight ahead.

"What about music?" asked Newt.

The musicians took their fiddles out of their pillowcases and our guitar player unwrapped his guitar. Chairs and tables, everything cleared out now and the musicians placed near the middle door so the music could be heard in all rooms.

The caller-out said we'd open with "Miller Boy." Grandpa said "we ust to dance 'Ol' Dan Tucker.'" Heels flew, skirts swung.

This had an amazing effect on the gloomy Delinskys. Instead of staring straight ahead, they began to watch the dancers. Back and forth and around and around the dancers flung; the floor rocked, the house shook. Then a very strange thing happened. Mr. Delinsky began to tap his foot.

Newt went over, seized Mrs. Delinsky and said: "Come on!"

She grabbed her husband as if Newt was about to harm her. Mr. Delinsky said something guttural and Mrs. Delinsky got up obediently. The result was pretty bad. Mrs. Delinsky's strange, endless skirts swung, but always in the wrong way; and always she turned in the wrong direction.

Mrs. Delinsky came, finally, and said something to her husband. He got up slowly—didn't pop up the way she did—and joined the dancers. He swung in the wrong direction too, and bumped into people; but, little by little, began to catch on as the beat and rhythm of the dance took hold of him. And of Mrs. Delinsky and Lizzie and soon they were sashaying forward and bowing to their partners.

"Swing Josie," said the caller-out.

Finally Delinsky smiled; after a while he let out a yip! which made everybody laugh. We held their arms and we shoved in the right direction. I'd like to say they were good dancers, but they were not. However, they did enjoy it, and so did we.

When eating time came the Delinskys plunged in, not bashful now. We found they could talk better than we thought. When they got stuck, Lizzy helped them out. Suddenly, without a word or invitation, Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky stood up and began to sing; the song had something to do with eating, for they would say a few words, pretend to take a bite of cookie, then sing again. It was all so new, so strange, that we clapped and urged them for more. But they sat down, looking self-conscious, as if afraid they'd been too bold. We were beginning to like them.

The odor of cookies and cakes filled the house, and there was cold fried chicken, sage sausage and cider; Ida and Lucy went here and there with dishpanfuls of popcorn. People in every room; men sitting on the floor. There was lots to eat. Hm!

When it was time to go Mrs. Delinsky went in and got the baby, then handed it to Delinsky to hold while she put on her overshoes. Delinsky looked so funny with his beard and with the baby no bigger than a summer squash that everybody smiled. Delinsky lit his lantern and we followed the Delinskys to their two-wheeled wagon; when the wagon pulled out we were all standing there, waving and calling to them.

Post-Mortem on The Delinsky Party

After all had gone, we sat around talking about the party and how much fun it had been; especially about the Delinskys. They were peculiar; there was no doubt of that. But kind of likable. Newt was concerned with Delinsky as a farmer. For Newt judged everybody by his farming. If you were not a good farmer you were nobody.

"I don't think he can ever make it," said Newt. "He'll crop out. You can't farm with one horse on forty acres."

"Maybe he'll be able to get another horse and more land," said Mrs. Kennedy.

Newt shook his head. You were a born farmer, or you weren't.

Newt shook down the base-burner and poured coal in the top. The party had been wonderful. It was too bad about the Delinskys going to crop out.

The last day of the term was the biggest, the most exciting day of the school year, for it was Exercises Day. The day our parents came to see if we had learned anything. It was exciting for the teacher, too, for if she hadn't pounded anything into our heads, she wouldn't get her job back in the fall.

There is the school house—I can see it this minute! It still stands. The Knabb School. It still has one room; corn comes up on all sides. Osage hedge grows around it. It is white; never in my life, in this section, did I ever see a school-house of any other color.

There was a coal house and there was a cyclone cave and an iron pump; the iron pump had a hook made out of baling wire and on this hung the school tin cup. We all drank out of that cup.

He walks up in front, agony on his face, and stands a moment, gazing out over the scholars.

The big day came in May. Usually, on the way to school of a morning, we whooped and yelped but not on the Last Day. All dressed up today, no "prisoner's base," no "burn out," which was our baseball game.

The girls looked awesome rigged out in their dresses. And we boys were so stiff and formal and tongue-tied in our Sunday clothes we could think of hardly anything to say to the girls we'd been going to school with all year. Now and then we'd say, "Hello" just to show we hadn't gone completely daft. Then the girl would say, "Hello" and that would end the conversation.

Everybody Is Very Polite—Today

We'd decorated the schoolroom till it looked awesome, too. There was a vase of flowers on the teacher's desk and there were so many pussy-willows and cattails that an Indian could have crept from one end of the room to the other without being seen by a paleface. Well, almost.

The teacher always kept her switches on two nails over the blackboard. But today they came down. No one was going to be fool enough today to be licked. Besides, the switches didn't seem to fit into the fine excitement of this last day of school. But next year those switches'd be back there again on the nails, right before our eyes every hour of the day.

We sit there stiff and formal; now and then a child giggles. But we don't encourage him. No monkey business today. Hours pass. At least it seems hours. Dinnertime comes. We get down our buckets from the shelves in the rear of the room and sit around politely and eat. Fried chicken. Always fried chicken on the last day of school. One by one we get up and put the bones in the coal bucket.

We go out and play as sedately as preachers; no base sliding and clothes grabbing today; nobody is pasted in the back with the ball. No boy tells another he is going to knock his block off. The girls go in and out of their little building as dignifiedly as bees in and out of a hive.

The teacher comes to the door and rings the bell . . . a little sadness here, for we know it is for the last time. We walk in as solemnly as mourners. Not one boy tries to trip another; not a girl has her hair yanked.

"Oh!" says the teacher. "We forgot to empty the coal scuttle. Harlan."

Harlan gets up and takes the bucket and tosses the bones over the fence into Mr. Knabb's pasture. Then puts the bucket in the coal house. Everything has to be nice today.

Bertha Scott holds up her hand. "Teacher, the flag over George Washington is crooked."

"Won't you please arrange it correctly, Bertha?"

Bertha marches forward and swings the flag into position.

"Thank you, Bertha."

"You're quite welcome, I'm sure."

Ordinarily the teacher would have said, "Fix it, please."

And Bertha would have mumbled something that sounded like "'Elcome."

But not today. Everybody is tremendously polite.

"You may go and fix it."

Arch races out and fixes the bridle. Then pumps himself a drink. We hear him throw on the ground with a splash the water he doesn't drink. We all immediately get thirsty.

At last we see them coming—our fathers and mothers and the school directors—coming down the road, some walking, some driving, Mrs. Gerilda Knabb in her sidesaddle. They're dressed up, too. Everything grows more terrifying. And the worst is yet to come. We've got to take part in the exercises. Somebody is going to just about die. And I know who it is.

We hear their feet on the platform outside; they knock as if this were a private house.

The teacher goes to the door and swings it wide. "Oh, how do you do! Please come right in. We're so pleased to have you. We're delighted, aren't we, children?"

"Yes," we peep.

In a moment our guests are stiffly seated. We stare at them as if they were the Northern Lights.

Newt is head director and has on his Sunday clothes and Congress shoes. He looks solemn, for he has Responsibilities.

More people come; the people nod to each other; it would hardly do to call out to each other any more than it would in church.

There is a rattling sound and we look out. It is the Delinskys in their two-wheeled cart drawn by the horse with the big hames. They come in, babies and all, not knowing parents were not supposed to bring infants to the Last Day. People squeeze over and make room; again the Delinskys sit just as they had at the Welcome Party. They seemed not to have learned anything.

Stretched across the room, from wall to wall, is a mysterious curtain.

The teacher gets up to deliver her welcome speech. She's just about scared to death, too. Our fathers and mothers study her . . . they are thinking, "Has she made good this year? Do we want her back?"

She tells what good children we have been. We grow popeyed, for she has whaled some of us. Ah yes!

"And now the scholars will endeavor to render one of our musical selections," she says politely.

She steps out in front of us and we begin to hawk and clear our throats. She raises her pointer, down it comes, up go our voices. We don't get off quite together. She smiles as if it wasn't anything. "Again, children." Now we are all off together, exactly right; pretty soon we get warmed up and make the pussywillows shake.

The parents clap politely. Mustn't overdo it just because they are our children. Our parents didn't believe in being "foolish" over us; the Puritan influence.

"And now," says the teacher, "the 'Birdies' Ball.'"

We tear into that; the robins, hopping around in the yard, stare up into our windows as if they'd never heard of a birdies' ball.

Newt's hand goes into his pocket; out come some notes. Can it be possible he is getting nervous—Newt who, to me, always seemed so self-possessed and sure of himself? But, for that matter, I didn't know that grown people ever felt jumpy and unsure of themselves. I thought it was just us children who had moments.

Newt Kennedy Makes a Speech

The teacher says, "And now we are going to be honored by a speech from our Head Director, Mr. Newt Kennedy."

Newt gets up to make the Head Director's speech; this has to be done every year to show that the directors take an interest in the school.

He walks up in front, agony on his face, and stands a moment, gazing out over the scholars. There is pain in his eyes. I feel sorry for him and in my imagination I suffer with him. He puts his hand in his pocket, then pulls his hand out and places it behind his back. He swallows and I—following him so intently, so sympathetically—swallow too.

He clears his throat. "Teacher and scholars of Knabb School." Pausing, he pulls a raveling out of his pocket. It falls on the floor. He continues.

War Criminals

Of 90,000 persons brought to trial on charges of treason since Norway's liberation from German armies, only 800 of the 20,000 sentenced to prison are still serving time. Pardons and readjustments have been common and by the year's end the number behind bars should total only about 600. Income from fines confiscations and reparations under the post-liberation treason proceedings totalled over $20,000,000.

Help for the Boss

Once in awhile, a new chapter is written in the history of labor union activities. Most labor-management difficulties are very old problems that have existed even since man first hired-out to another; however, a lot of them belong to new situations, and sometimes we have thought they were new because we had not solved them before. But we have paid increasing attention to hours, wages, and working conditions. A new science of industrial relations has grown up, with nearly every company giving time and effort to improve things for the worker.

One-sided Progress?

In this the unions have helped, for unions in fact exist for the main purpose of looking out for their own. Now, if we have reached the place where union members can see things they can do in turn for their employers, have we not reached an important milestone in industrial relations?

Just recently Mr. Walter Cenerazzo, president of the American Watch Workers Union, led members of his union in a project designed to help the Waltham Watch Company. This company, one of three major American watchmakers, had closed its Waltham, Mass., plant December 31 because it could no longer meet interest payments on a debt of some 5 million dollars. In closing, the 96-year-old company had to discharge 2,300 workers.

What Workers Did

Mr. Cenerazzo, having an unusual grasp of the many problems that labor has to face these days, determined to do something. "If a company is worth working for and drawing a livelihood from, it's worth putting your money into to furnish the working capital to make it a success," he told union members in a mass meeting. Then Mr. Cenerazzo and Waltham employees undertook to see what they could do about it.

Right away, 820 union members pledged themselves to subscribe $318,000 in equity financing. More than $40,000 was put up in cash. One employee with 45 years service pledged $5,000. A stock-buying plan for employees was set up, permitting purchases of stock on a time-payment basis. "We expect to raise more than $1,250,000 by this method, or about $500 for each employee," said Mr. Cenerazzo.

Common Problems

This is the story of a company up against trouble. It is also a story of employee integrity, courage, and determination. I hope these workers succeed in saving their company. In this story, the theme of labor-management relations has indeed taken a new twist. The workers of Waltham have understood the desperate need of industry for capital. "Twice the working capital is needed now as in 1940, because of increased costs," Mr. Cenerazzo told workers.

This milestone in industrial relations proves that labor unions can see that industry's problems are their problems also. You may call it just good sense—seeing the other fellow's difficulty and helping him out of it. Another name for it is the Golden Rule.

These Minnesota mountains are worth moving

The other day the editor of the Minnetonka Herald, M. G. Gullixson, published an interesting editorial which everyone in Minnesota might well take to heart. It said in part: "The topography of the Iron Range has been altered through the years by man-made mountains—mountains of 'waste' material from the mining of high-grade iron ore. In these stockpiles, in lean ore ground deposits and in the taconite-bearing rock of northern Minnesota, lies the future of one of the state's major industries and the future of a large segment of the state population."

Gullixson

HAVE YOU EVER STOPPED TO THINK what this major industry really means to Minnesota, and to you personally? For example,

DID YOU KNOW

—that iron ore taxes have poured over $139,000,000 into Minnesota's $180,000,000 permanent trust funds?

—that the income from this fund helps support the public schools in your community, as well as the University and many other educational institutions throughout the state?

—that, next to agriculture, iron ore is Minnesota's greatest single source of tax revenue?

—that year after year this industry provides jobs for some 15,000 Minnesotans?

—that it helps support, directly or indirectly, nearly a quarter million people—almost as many as live in the entire city of St. Paul?

—that iron ore accounts for nearly half of all the tonnage hauled by Minnesota railroads?

—that it has built Duluth-Superior into America's second biggest tonnage port?

—that the iron ore industry uses more electricity for power than any other industry in the state?

—that the production and processing of iron ore has created an important market for Minnesota farm products, as well as for lumber, heavy machinery and fuel?

—and that, since the war, this one industry has eased your own taxes by paying in state and local taxes an average of $25,000,000 each year?

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars necessary to hasten the development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and in jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Fertilizer Called 'Good Buy,' Liberal Use Urged To Beat High Fixed Costs and Lower Crop Prices

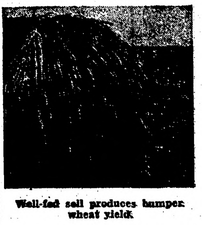
COMMERCIAL fertilizer is an "excellent buy" and should be applied liberally to responsive crops to beat the squeeze of high fixed costs and lower farm prices, according to E. H. Longnecker, Michigan State College soil specialist.

Longnecker pointed out that in the present period of declining farm prices increased crop producing efficiency is vital if reasonable farm profits are to be obtained. This can be accomplished, he said, only if soil productivity is maintained or increased economically.

He recommended several steps to good soil management. First, he advised eliminating crops from land where such crops grow poorly. He advised, too, that a soil test be made of each field at least once during the crop rotation. The results of these tests can be considered in planning the fertilizer program.

Fertilizer should be applied to responsive feed crops such as oats, barley, wheat and alfalfa and to corn when grown on well suited land; also to responsive cash crops, particularly potatoes, sugar beets and wheat. As cash crop prices decline, such acreage should be reduced and the acreage of productive sod crops increased, he said.

Longnecker recommended adding fertilizer to permanent pastures to increase production. This is particularly important on poorly drained mineral soils and muck soils. He also suggested eliminating excess tillage that adds expense and increases crop production costs per acre. Michigan tests have shown that plowing, leveling, and packing will give as good or better crop results as seedbed preparation that includes double discing and spike-tooth harrowing.



Well-fed soil produces bumper wheat yield.

Conservation of soil and water are vital, he said. On rolling cropland this may require one or a combination of practices such as cover crops, sod waterways, contour tillage, strip cropping, diversions or terraces. Where wind erosion is a problem, field strip cropping and windbreaks may be necessary.

He recommended further that crop residues be returned to the soil either as surface mulch or by plowing under. Manure should be carefully stored to reduce leaching and decomposition losses. Medium applications of manure to fields at frequent intervals, he said, are preferable to heavy application less frequently.

Plant Food Pays 'Double-Barreled' Dividend: Boosts Crop Yields and Adds Organic Matter

Thick topgrowth means abundant organic matter for the soil.

ADDING plenty of fertilizer to the soil is an investment that pays a "double-barreled dividend," declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in citing a recent statement by Dr. Norman J. Volk, associate director of the Purdue Agricultural Experiment Station.

Dr. Volk points out that plant food not only helps produce higher crop yields at a lower cost per acre, but it gives more corn stalks, more straw and other crop residues. These leftovers have a high value as raw materials for making organic matter.

To get the top benefit out of these extra crop residues, you have to be sure to return them to the soil, Dr. Volk advises. Don't burn them or haul them off. Put them back in the earth.

The more crop residues you return, the more organic matter your soil will have. And with a high organic matter content, your soil will make more efficient use of every pound of fertilizer you apply. This will mean high crop yields, providing in turn a bigger supply of "makings" for additional organic matter.

Then if you combine these steps with a crop rotation built around deep-rooted legumes and the regular return of barnyard manure, you will have an "all-star" soil building team which will maintain and increase organic matter supplies. Well fertilized legumes such as alfalfa or sweet clover have deep-probing taproots that "plant" mineralized organic matter down in the soil. These roots sometimes penetrate as far as four to five feet below the surface. They make trail-blazing paths for air and water and the roots of other crops. When such legumes are plowed or disced under they add important quantities of organic matter.

Regular additions of organic matter to the soil from all these sources will improve its texture and tilth. Such soil will have the sponginess needed to grab and hold large quantities of water. It will be porous, well drained and ventilated. It will have "built-in" protection from erosion, costly runoff of water and losses of topsoil.

Your Paper is Worth Reading

Each week the Holt Weekly News comes to you for your pleasure, profit, information or for whatever other use you want to make of it.

But before you can use it for any of these purposes, a good many hours of thought, planning and work have to be put into it.

Your front page, containing the bulk of the week's news that happened in Holt and the surrounding area, is the product of considerable effort by the people in the Holt Weekly News office and our correspondents. As a result, you know pretty much what's going on around our neck of the woods.

Because most weekly newspaper subscribers take a distinct satisfaction in being able to read in their home town publication about subjects of national or international scope — happenings beyond the limits of their particular town— the Holt Weekly News tries to anticipate that demand by bringing its readers the excellent selection of colums, features and pictures provided by Western Newspaper Union's Printed Syndicate Service.
This is interpretive reporting in the form of colums commenting on the political, social and economic scene, written by highly trained, facile reporters. Other articles, strictly on the feature side, appeal to the ladies, while still others are of interest to virtually anyone who will open a newspaper in the first place.

The pictures, you'll find, cover a wide range of human action that has made news in recent days. You'll enjoy them, and they'e exclusive in the Holt Weekly News.

These features, as most of you already have discovered, are intended to inform and entertain. The Holt Weekly News believes they achieve that aim as well or better than comparative material in any of the large metropolitan papers.

Take a look at the inside pages of your newspaper now. The Holt Weekly News is proud to have you do so.

Rush Meals

If meal preparation must be rushed in your home, plan to serve broiled foods for speed and flavor. You can save time also by making drop biscuits, drop cookies and ice-box cookies instead of the rolled kind.

4th An. Barley Growing Contest

$5,800 in cash prizes will be offered this year to growers of prize barley in 23 Minnesota Counties, including this county, in the 4th Annual State Malting Barley Contest.

The Minnesota Brewers Association is sponsoring the Malting Barley Contest for the fourth year. The contest is conducted with the cooperation of the University of Minnesota Department of Agriculture, the Minnesota and Northwest Crop Improvement Associations, and the Minnesota Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food. In announcing the contest, Mr. Farrell, Jr. of the Minnesota Brewers Association, said the Minnesota Brewers have been very happy to sponsor these contests in the interest of improving the quality and quantity of Malting Barley in this and 22 counties. Contestants in each county receive ten cash prizes which range from $10 to $50 each and in addition there is a Grand Prize for the State Champion of $300. $200 for the reserve Champion, and $100 for the Third Prize; also 8 awards of $50 each.

Mr. Farrell further stated that the purpose of the contest was to encourage production and marketing of quality barley that can be used for malting aud to acquaint the farmers with the greater profit possibilities in malting barley; also to concentrate production on proved varieties of malting barley found to be best adapted to growth in the State of Minnesota.

The 5 varities recommended and approved for the contest are: Barbless Wis. 38, Kindred (L), OAB 21 (Artic), Montcalm, and Moore.

Last year a 17-year old Stearns County lad, Alcuin Caspers of Melrose, was the Grand Champion winner. The Reserve Champion award was won by Noel Brule of Crookston, Polk County, and the Third Prize was awarded to 28-year old Anthony Imdieke of Melrose, Stearns County

It has been made very easy for a contestant to enter this $5,800 Contest. All you must do is to plant 10 acres or more of malting barley, using one of the 5 approved varieties and submit a bushel sample thru the County Agent's office. He must also sign the official entry blank with the County Agent on or before May 1.

Further information in regard to entering the Contest and the rules can be obtained from the local County Agent.

Value of Landscaping

Planned planting of trees and shrubs may control climate on a good-sized lot by as much as 10 to 15 degrees. By proper landscaping and planting, the comfort and livability of the home and its surroundings can thus be increased greatly. The home can be made cooler in summer and warmer in winter and at the same time the home owner can save on fuel bills.

Red Mahogany

While much mahogany is finished in reddish tones, the expression "red mahogany" has come to be associated with the deeply stained finish that was foisted upon the public up to a generation ago. It was often so dark, especially on pianos, that it completely killed the mahogany grain.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

U.S. Deficit Worries Economists; Acheson Favors Token Formosa Aid; 75-Cent Wage Floor Now Effective

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BIG DEFICIT:

Some Are Worried

The two-year, 10-billion-dollar deficit looming as inevitable for the United States had some economic experts in a state of apprehension.

Among these was Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, former chairman of the President's council of economic advisers. The deficit, Dr. Nourse indicated, has stirred fears of inflation and possibly a "rising uncertainty as to the stability of the dollar itself."

DR. NOURSE, who recently resigned his chairmanship on the economic council, called for a "specific and hard-headed plan for getting back to the black ink."

He declared the federal budget could be balanced in a year or two, but only if the government practices economy and reduces or defers many of President Truman's programs "in the development and welfare areas."

To objective observers, Dr. Nourse was another voice crying in the wilderness—for, on the basis of political results in the past 16 years, practice or support of economy didn't bring many votes when the chips were down.

THE SENSATIONAL SUCCESS of the late Mr. Roosevelt, also a great spender of public money—a program which helped give him four presidential election victories—was bound to loom as a vital lesson in practical politics.

On the record, the American taxpayer cares less about his government's saving money than he does about its being spent.

FORMOSA:

Token Aid?

According to reliable reports, U.S. State Secretary Dean Acheson was in favor of a congressional move to send about 28 million dollars in economic aid to the Chinese Nationalists in Formosa.

THE QUESTION which immediately arose was: Why?

Was it another money-down-a-rat-hole action? Another token appeasement of those who were demanding more and actual aid to Formosa?

Those were legitimate questions, in any attempt to penetrate the maze of the intricate foreign policy being practiced by the United States. Acheson had let it be known most clearly that he feels the Nationalist cause is lost in China, and there were many who contended that it wouldn't be long until the state secretary advocated U.S. recognition of the Chinese Communist regime.

If those things were true, why send 28 million good American dollars rolling helplessly into the path of a Red juggernaut already conceded as sure to roll over all China?

ACHESON, it seemed to most, was laying himself open to charges of inconsistency, or, perhaps even more important, willing to play fast and loose with American money for more time to juggle his highly involved and puzzling diplomatic concepts.

At the risk of over-simplification, it could be contended that there was still hope to stop the Communist surge in China, or there was not. If not, then there seemed little point in wasting further U.S. resources in a futile attempt otherwise. If so, then applying 28 million dollars to the effort would appear as simply a peurile gesture.

TAXATION:

One Billion More

Just as nearly everyone expected, Mr. Truman's tax recommendations were well below what he had stated a year ago he would ask for when congress convened. The first figure was 12 billions. What Mr. Truman asked for, instead, was one billion.

MR. TRUMAN'S proposal included both tax cuts and tax increases, but, overall, it would hike the nation's tax bill by a billion dollars. Even so, there was no ready assurance the President would get that much.

That he trimmed his tax proposals at all was due to mounting sentiment within his own administration ranks that appreciable tax increases would be unwise at this time, and that the effort should be toward stimulating business as much as possible, rather than retard or discourage it by added tax burdens.

THE PRESIDENT recommended a cut in excise taxes—as it had been generally believed he would. These would include levies on travel, telephone and telegraph bills, luggage, women's pocketbooks, furs, jewels, cosmetics, etc. This would be done provided "loopholes" in other taxes were closed.

Mr. Truman also proposed a billion dollar increase in the taxes on corporations, big estates and gifts.

As it stood, the proposal added up to bad news for big business, good news for small business, and some cheer for wage-earners.

Recall Asked

Donald R. Heath, U.S. minister to Bulgaria, has been termed "persona non grata" by the Bulgarian government which has asked that he be recalled. The Bulgarians charge Heath received secret government information from Traicho Kostov, former deputy premier of Bulgaria who was executed on a charge of treason.

WAGES:

75-Cent Floor

The nation's new 75 cents an hour wage law is now in effect.

That means that all workers employed in interstate commerce, or in production of goods for interstate commerce, must be paid a minimum of 75 cents an hour.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN hailed the new law as being "dictated by social justice" and a step that will bring "great and lasting benefits."

Significant, however, was an almost immediate call by certain CIO union leaders for effort to boost the minimum wage to a flat dollar an hour, and broadened coverage under the law.

IT WAS PERHAPS with these new union demands in mind that President Truman said he had asked labor secretary Tobin to "keep me informed on the operation of the new law."

Most workers are now making more than 75 cents an hour. But it has been estimated that the new minimum will mean wage increases to about 1.5 million persons, more than half of whom are in the South. This is expected to cost employers about 300 million dollars annually.

NEWS:

No Monopoly

Since the early days when Reuter's news agency and the Associated Press were pioneering in the gathering and dissemination of news, there have been frequent legal tangles over the ownership of news and rights of its distribution.

NOW THAT RADIO has invaded the news field, it was inevitable that the same sort of argument would arise over the ownership of radio news and whether one station or a chain of stations can create a monopoly in broadcasting the news.

The federal communications commission ruled that such cannot be done, and a United States court of appeals has upheld the FCC. The court ruled that the FCC may deny a license to a radio station applicant if it finds that approval would tend to create a news monopoly.

The court said: "Monopoly in the mass communication of news and advertising is contrary to the public interest, even if not in terms prescribed by the antitrust laws."

THE RULING was in connection with the case of the Mansfield (Ohio) Journal and the Lorain (Ohio) Journal whose applications for radio station licenses were turned down by the FCC. In rejecting the applications, the commission ruled the Mansfield Journal used its position in the community "to coerce its advertisers to enter into exclusive advertising contracts with the newspaper."

The commission added that since both newspapers were owned and controlled by Samuel A. Horvitz and Isadore Horvitz, it took the view that what happened in Mansfield "was indicative of what might occur under similar circumstances in Lorain."

In appealing to the court, the newspapers contended the FCC had gone outside its province and had acted under antitrust laws.

FEPC Stalled

In the first test of the fair employment practices commission bill in the current congress, President Truman ran afoul of southern-led filibuster tactics, with his good friend, Sam Rayburn, leading them.

Rayburn, the administration's own leader in the house, twice was able to bar consideration of the FEPC bill by giving priority to measures aimed at statehood for Alaska and Hawaii.

Fraternal Dexterity

A rather bewildered man was attending his first lodge meeting. He was now a full-fledged member and was entitled to the same rights and privileges that the others enjoyed. As he started to pull out his watch to find out the time he realized there wasn't any to pull out. It had been lifted. He reported it quietly to the president of the lodge who immediately asked, "Who was standing next to you last?"

The new member pointed out a man with whom he had been chatting a few minutes before.

"O. K.," said the president, "you just wait here. Everything will be all right."

A few minutes later the president came back to the new member and slipped him his watch.

"Swell," said the new man, "thanks a lot. Did he say anything?"

"Pipe down," whispered the president hoarsely, "he ain't missed it yet."

Explanation

A negro had been trying for a long time to gain membership in a lodge. They found so many reasons for postponing the induction ceremonies that he became suspicious.

"Ah'm inclined to think," he said, "dat yo' niggahs doan' want me in dis heah lodge."

"Well," said the chairman, "I'll tell yo' how it is. Yo' is bald, ain't yo'?"

"Yeah. But what dat got to do wid it?"

"An' yo' is black ain't yo'?" continued the chairman.

"Sho' nuff."

"Well, den, considah yo'self black bald."

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

Homer Croy blinked back tears as he drove along the country road amid scenes of his childhood. An older, wiser man, he was going home—a prodigal son of northwest Missouri returning to places that revive memories nostalgically pleasant, terrifyingly vivid. Places like the Kennedys'. He remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their two daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his childhood pal. The time of the painful "welcome" party to the Delinskys, the "foreigners." He remembers the last-day-of-school exercises when Newt made a speech as head director. He can still hear Newt as he addresses the class.

CHAPTER IV

"I'm pleased to be here today," he says. This isn't true, but it's all right to say it on the Last Day. Now he starts all over. "I am pleased to be here today and to be able to say a few words before so many bright-appearin' scholars and students. I myself once went to school." He pauses, then puts his hand in his other pocket. "Not in a fine, modern school like this, but in a tumble-down affair. I would have dearly loved to go to such a fine, modern school as this, heated with a stove, and sit on a fine, smooth seat, instead of a hewn bench like we had. Sometimes we got splinters . . ." he pauses awkwardly, looks around, swallows ". . . in our clothes. Some of you, this past year, have not studied as hard as you should." Harlan drops his eyes; I move uneasily. "The first requisite of every citizen is to get a good education. Education is essential to life."

He pauses. He is stuck. My heart goes out to him.

But he is not stuck. He has been thinking.

"Why, right in this schoolroom I once listened to a debate. 'Resolved: A College Education Is More to Be Desired Than a Thousand Dollars.' I am happy to say that the education side won, which is as it should be."

Now he is about to finish; his voice takes on a ringing note, for, after all, he can speak better than we thought at first. "Now let us, one and all, boys and girls, resolve that during the forthcoming year we will study harder than ever so that we can become useful citizens when we enter that bigger schoolroom—the schoolroom of life!"

There is a tremendous burst of applause; we mean it, too, for some way or other he has made us wish to do a little better in school and to have ideals.

Mrs. Kennedy looks at him admiringly. And so do Harlan and Ida and Lucy. Newt tries to appear modest. But he knows and everybody knows it's been a good speech.

The teacher goes up to the curtain and says, "And now our program of entertainment will begin." She dramatically pulls the curtain and there is the stage arranged for our school play. Seated on the stage are the actors, shaking like cornsilk in a gale. The teacher says, "The title of this play is 'A Lesson From Life.'" She tinkles a bell. The play is on.

It seems wonderful to us; and it seems wonderful to the parents—especially to the parents of the boys and girls taking part.

The teacher closes the curtain and hand clapping fills the room. A yearning comes over me; maybe sometimes I can get to see a city play with fine actors.

My Essay Is Well Received

The teacher glances at a slip of paper in her hand. "The next number on our program will be the reading of an original composition entitled 'The Most Valuable Thing I Have Learned From Life' by Homer Croy."

To my horror I find I am glued to my seat; not only that but my legs have turned to hay. I try to get up, but I can't make it, for—Oh dreadful day!—I am also paralyzed from my waist down. Finally, by superhuman effort I get to my feet and walk to the front of the schoolroom. The paralysis has now entered my tongue; terror seizes me.

I grip the pages of my essay. The essay is going to say that cultivating a fine character is the most valuable thing I have learned from life.

Finally—after a heroic struggle—I get a word out. Then I get another out. Ma smiles reassuringly.

In a few moments I have an exalted feeling. Why, you are getting along all right! something tells me.

At last I am through. I give a little bow and start for my seat. A hand clapping goes up. My mother beams. Pa tries to look modest.

More speeches, more recitations, but none from Lizzie Delinsky; she can't talk good enough. Now comes the distribution of prizes. Each day, all year, the teacher has marked down in a little book the person who got the "head mark" for the day. That is, the person who stood at the head of the spelling class. And now, for today, the "head marks" have been added up.

The teacher pauses dramatically. "I now have the pleasure to announce who is the best speller in our school." She reaches into her desk and pulls out a mysterious package. Then she announces the girl's name; she is one of what we called the "big" girls of the school. The girl marches proudly forward and, standing before the school, every eye glued on her, opens the present—a copy of Pilgrim's Progress.

"Thank you, Teacher; thank you very much." Then she starts for her seat, doing her best to look modest.

At last all the prizes are distributed and the teacher delivers what we called the Farewell Words. She thanks us for having been so good during the past school year and hopes we'll all be back next fall. There is a tremendous hand clapping.

Formality is over; this is visiting time; talk all you want to. The schoolroom that had been so breathless during the play is now filled with talk and laughter.

The directors have gone out to the well, have pumped a drink and are talking. Finally they come back in and Newt asks if he can speak privately to the teacher. The two talk in low tones.

Newt marches up to the front and gives the bell a shake.

The hubbub stops instantly; we know something important has happened.

"Listen, please, everybody," says Newt. No ravel pulling now. "The directors have just had a talk together and we're all of one mind—we want our same teacher back this fall."

Now indeed we do clap. "I shall be delighted to come back," says the teacher and we clap again.

The people go outside in the schoolyard. The horses whinney, for they know it is going-home time. The Delinskys pile into their cart; they are more at ease now than they had been in the schoolhouse. He speaks to the horse and the horse leans into his collar. We stare at a horse that can understand Russian.

In a few moments I have an exalted feeling.

The people who live north of the school start off together. We walk because we live near. My father and Newt walk side by side, talking man talk. My mother and Mrs. Kennedy walk together, talking woman talk.

We come to our house and Pa and Newt talk a moment. Then the Kennedys go on down the road and Pa and Ma and I turn in. I'll have to change my clothes and help do the chores. More work.

The last day of school is over. I suddenly feel sad.

In our section we hardly ever use the word "love." We said "like." A person might "love" his country, or he might "love" God, but he never said he "loved" his wife. He said he "liked" his wife, or he "managed to get along with her pretty well," but he never bleated out he loved her. We said a boy was "going" with a girl, or "keeping company," or "calling on her regularly." But we never said he was in "love" with her.

Mrs. Kennedy Gets A Token of Love

Yet the attachment husbands and wives had for each other was deep and abiding. And the attachment parents had for their children was deep and moving, though they didn't put it into words. We thought of such expressions as being "soft" and out of place. In fact, we were always a little embarrassed when someone said something tender about another person, or spoke openly of affection. Life was hard; in many ways it was cruel. No time for mush.

I'm sure men married, had children and died without ever using the word "love" in relation to their wives. But that was all right; it was our way. Yet secretly the wives must have yearned for it.

In this way Newt was like all our men. He didn't go around saying he "loved" his wife; sometimes, in speaking of her, he called her "the woman."

Then, one day, Newt, for our section, did something extremely unusual.

When the pioneers had first arrived a most important matter was fencing. There was little or no timber; snake fences impossible; and there was hardly any barbed wire. So the early settlers had planted osage hedge. It grew rapidly but was not a very good fence. Winter freeze would get it and there would be thin spots that would let the stock out. So, bit by bit, this hedge was coming down and wire was going up.

On this special day, he picked up an unusually smooth, orange-colored chip and stood admiring it. Moved by impulse, he carried the chip to the woodshed. Here he had a flat, thick-leaded carpenter's pencil. With the pencil he wrote on the chip, "I love you," filled a pail, put this chip on top and carried the pail to the house.

"Here's some chips," he said with an effort to be casual and set the bucket down by the door. Then walked away hastily, almost guiltily.

Mrs. Newt was touched when she saw this humble tribute. Actually using the word "love!" She wanted to thank him. She arranged the pots and pans, thinking just what she would say, then went out the kitchen door looking for him. By this time Newt was grinding a sickle bar; he was sitting astride the frame.

"I got your chip," she said.

He pumped a moment; a gray froth of sand particles and water raced along where the blade engaged the stone.

"Did you?" said Newt, immensely pleased.

"I liked it."

His feet continued to fly. "Did you?"

"I'm going to keep it."

"I didn't think about you doin' that," he said, even more pleased.

"It was nice and thoughtful of you."

"It wasn't anything," allowed Newt, a bit embarrassed now. "I just happened to think of it."

The matter of the chip was dropped; there were other things to talk of; there were always things to talk of on a farm and in raising a family. Finally she turned and started back toward the kitchen door. Newt looked up from the stone and gazed after her, pleased with himself and with her. "I ought to do those things oftener," he thought.

She placed it on the center table in the sitting room for everyone to see—this beautiful, orange-colored, osage hedge chip. If company came in and if they didn't seem to notice the chip, she would pick it up and say, "See what I found!"

Mr. Kennedy Has An 'Adventure'

She had another way of showing her affection for him. Newt wore high-topped leather boots. In bad weather they became soaked. When the day's work was over, he pulled them off with his bootjack, then hung the bootjack on its nail in the kitchen; there were half-moon marks on the wall where the bootjack had swung back and forth. It would not do to let the boots dry when they were wet, for they would become hard and misshapen, would crack and soon would be leaking. So he kept a bucket of drying oats. The oats, when poured into the boots and allowed to stay there overnight, let the boots dry slowly, remain soft and pliable and hold their shape. He should have poured the oats in himself, but she always did this for him; it was a kind of token of her love. She never asked the children to do this. She didn't mind doing it, she said; this was as close as she would come to expressing her love for him.

She believed that Newt grew lightheaded when he oiled the windmill. He had once said he had felt dizzy up on the platform. She had never forgotten it; each time he went out to oil, she went with him. There she would stand, apprehensively watching him as he mounted higher and higher. Of course if he had been seized with lightheadedness she could not have done anything. He wished she would not come, for the neighbors joked him about it. It was a reflection, indeed, on a man when his wife had to come out and watch his so he wouldn't fall off the windmill! But he couldn't tell her not to come. When he was up on the platform, he would look toward the road to see if anyone were passing. He hoped no one would be.

As soon as he came down, she would go to the house. The children laughed at her, and so did Grandpa. But nothing kept her from going and standing by the windmill when Newt went up to oil.

It was at this time that Newt had an Adventure. That is the way we thought of it. And it was indeed exactly that.

He had gone to town in the two-wheeled, one-seated driving cart used on muddy days, but instead of returning by our main-traveled road, he took a side road.

Ahead he saw a mover wagon; there was nothing unusual about this, for movers were always going through. Every spring they went by on their way to western Nebraska to get "cheap land." In the early days there had been "free land," which was land that could be homesteaded. But that was all gone; now it was "cheap land," unimproved claims which could be bought for little or nothing.

Giant Singing-Fish

The giant-singing catfish stands high on the list of the largest fresh-water fish. Some weigh more than 200 pounds. This fish serenades the angler with a deep, purring music. It is found deep in British Guiana jungles.

LINCOLN

Wise with the wisdom of ages,
Shrewd as the man of trade,
Grim as the prophets and sages,
Keen as a damask blade;

Firm as a granite-ribbed mountain,
Tender as woman's song,
Gay as a scintillant fountain—
Yet was he oaken-strong.

Here, the wonder of eons:
Born into pain and strife;
Dead, with a thousand peons
Deathless, he enters life.

—Thomas Curtis Clarke, in Rural New-Yorker.

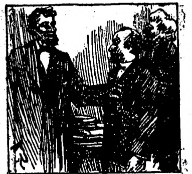
termed "that meddlesome body," the committee on the conduct of war.

The President rapidly reviewed Grant's record since he joined the army. He was at Cairo with a small force. He urgently asked permission to move, saying he would win a victory. The consent was long delayed, but it came at last. Within two or three hours his men were on the steamers, and the brilliant victory of Belmont followed.



"Grant," He Said, "Fights, and That Is What I Want."

It was not a great victory, for the forces engaged were not large, but it was a beginning and showed the mettle of Grant.

Back to Cairo, with a larger force, he again and again urged for permission to move, and when the permission came he rushed his men to the steamers, and three days later he captured Fort Henry. Not delaying an hour he pushed his small force across the country to Fort Donelson. He was not dismayed by the fact that the force in the fort was larger than his own, but immediately locked the doors on that force. When the rest of his men reached him, by a series of brilliant assaults, he captured, not alone the fort, but an army almost equal in number to his own.

At Shiloh, unlike any other general, he remained to fight after his disaster on the first day, he made no effort to get the remains of his army across the river, but at daylight the next morning became the attacking party, winning a victory. He was now at Vicksburg, and complaints of his delay were many. Only that day two senators had urged Lincoln to displace Grant, but he would not do it. "Grant," he said, "fights, and that is what I want." He said Grant had promised him he would capture Vicksburg by the fourth of July, and he intended to give him the opportunity.

The President, with deep earnestness, then declared: "When he captures Vicksburg, I will find some way to boost him over the heads of all others, and give him command of all the armies. With Grant in command, by Jinks!" (his favorite expletive) "the armies will move and move to some purpose. He fights."

The truth about taconite

"For a long period authorities wondered what would happen to Minnesota's iron ore industry when the high grade ores obtained from Range mines were exhausted," writes Grove Wills, editor of the Eveleth News-Clarion. "Then (in 1948) Professor E. W. Davis, director of the University of Minnesota Mines Experiment Station, made real pig iron out of that common product of the Mesabi Range—taconite. Communities of the state and nation can feel assured that a mighty job has been accomplished."

Wills

TRUE, MR. WILLS, but an even mightier job still remains to be done before taconite can supply the final answer to the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth.

What in the world is taconite? Taconite is the virgin rock from which all iron ore comes. Minnesota is blessed with billions of tons of it. But unlike the rapidly disappearing high-grade ore (which is really taconite pre-processed by Nature), this hard, unyielding rock is worthless as it lies in the ground.

You don't skim off taconite and dump it in an ore boat. First you must drill it, blast it and mine it, then crush it fine as flour, then separate the tiny bits of iron ore from all the sand and other impurities. Finally, you must build it up again into chunks that can be fed into a pig iron furnace.

In other words, you don't just pluck iron ore out of taconite. You manufacture it.

Professor Davis has demonstrated in his laboratory that this can be done. But it remains for the mining companies themselves—at their own expense—to prove that it can be done cheaply enough to compete against other sources of iron ore.

These companies are now operating some 20 plants which manufacture iron ore from the so-called low-grade ore found in partly decomposed taconite—the rock which Nature has started to whip into shape for iron ore production. The next step—if we are to have a continuing ore industry in Minnesota—is to tackle taconite itself.

Already $2,000,000 of private capital has been invested in an experimental taconite plant at Aurora, Minn. But millions more will be needed to turn this experiment into a practical operation. Just one full-scale taconite "factory" alone would cost around $75,000,000.

It is now plain that the commercial production of taconite iron ore—which every thinking person in Minnesota wants—hinges upon a free flow of these investment dollars by the present producing companies.

Can they continue to take this risk? The fateful decision may be made within this very year.

Why we publish these facts:

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars necessary to hasten the development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and in jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

See where a bank in Denver is putting in left-handed checkbooks. They figure their southpaw depositors deserve just as much consideration as the right handers.

Time was when it was believed that left-handed people had no right to exist at all. If a youngster showed signs of using his left hand, his parents were supposed to break him of the habit—to force him to use his right.

But today most doctors will tell you that changing a child's natural left-handed tendency usually causes more harm than good. Stammering and other nervous disorders often get their start that way with children.

From where I sit, if a man wants to use his left hand—that's his business. It's not such a good idea to make anyone do things our way, just because we think it's right. Personally, I think a mellow glass of beer is the finest beverage on earth. If you happen to prefer a Coke—why, go to it! Only leave me the same freedom of choice, won't you?

Newcastle Outbreak

Contrary to a widespread belief, there are not always heavy losses in egg production when Newcastle disease strikes a laying flock. For example, nearly two-thirds of the chickens in a West coast egg-laying contest were stricken during a mild outbreak of the disease. Some individual declines in egg output occurred, yet total production for the test year was not materially affected.

Glass Fibers

In making glass fibers, used in materials that resist water, acids, heat, cold, and electricity, the industry first makes big glass marbles, from which continuous filaments are drawn out faster than a mile a minute. A strand of glass fiber may be 15 times finer than human hair, and have a tensile strength greater than steel.

Chautauqua, N.Y.

The town of Chautauqua, New York was named by North Carolina Tuscarora Indians who joined the Five Iroquois Indian nations in the 18th century. They brought the name from their village on the Neuse river which they called "Chattawka," meaning "where the fish are taken out."

Stained Glass

European monks, skilled by long practice as manuscript illuminators, brought stained glass craftsmanship to its highest level in the 14th and 15th centuries. By rediscovering their painstaking methods, American craftsmen of the past 80 years have recaptured this lost art.

Linoleum Care

If you want your inlaid linoleum to have lasting good looks and give long wear, give it gentle care. Too much water, strong soaps and harsh abrasives are the worst enemies of a linoleum floor covering.

Metal Furniture

Modern, easy-to-keep-clean metal furniture requires a smooth, enduring finish. The coating must have toughness, durability and attractiveness. It must also be acid and alcohol proof.

Daylighting

Glare is largely caused by excessive contact between adjacent bright and dark surfaces. Therefore, extensive areas of windows and skylights which minimize those contrasts are recommended practice for good daylighting.

Needless Waste

Experts tell us that we, as a nation, neglect our property to the extent of some 600 million dollars every year . . . that most of it could be saved by renewing paint coatings when necessary.

Animal Care

Even a healthy animal will lose strength and become susceptible to disease if it is exposed to bad weather for long periods without rest, water, and good feed.

Egg Beater

Rinse your egg beater and fruit juicer under running cold water right after you have used them. It takes only a second and saves minutes of hard work later on.

Bruised Livestock

Losses each year from bruised livestock run into millions of dollars. It isn't good sense to work to prepare an animal for market and then cut profit by rough treatment.

Disinfect Building

When brucellosis infected cattle are removed from a building, the building must be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected.

Drugs for Brucellosis

Three drugs—sulfadiazine, streptomycin and aureomycin—are being used in treating humans who contract brucellosis.

Farm Animals

Farm animals of all ages may suffer from vitamin A deficiency, but young animals are particularly susceptible.

Fish Boxes

Fish boxes on fishing yachts now being built are lined with stainless steel to prevent corrosion.

"Ring" Tests

Milk or "ring" tests may be used for locating herds infected with brucellosis.

Culling Poultry

Culling of unproductive and sick-looking poultry from flocks is a sound dis[illegible]vention measure.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Announces U.S. Will Add Hydrogen Bomb to Arms Program; Major Housing Plan Is Envisioned

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

H-BOMBS:
Time of Decision

One of the most important decisions in world history had been put up to Harry S. Truman. Should he order construction of the hydrogen bomb?

When, after a respectable period of deliberation, he did make up his mind, the President expressed his decision in the most matter-of-fact manner possible!

The U. S. would continue its development and production of all types of military weapons, including atomic armaments and the so-called hydrogen bomb. That statement, probably intentionally cryptic, may or may not have meant that the U. S. already has begun work on the H-bomb.

Only one thing was sure—it was a terribly important decision, not only to Mr. Truman but to every person in the world.

IT WASN'T the cost of the bomb that was a poser, even though that was expected to be in the neighborhood of four billion dollars. It wasn't a doubt as to whether it could be made, for science declared it could. It wasn't a hesitancy about its effect, for if an enemy decided to, and could, construct the bomb, any experiments on the part of the U. S. to make and test it would be justified.

No, it was none of these that aggravated the responsibility and the solemnity of the decision. Instead, it was the question of life and death involved and even more terrible, if purely speculative, question; Might not man be unleashing a force which would destroy all mankind?

THE PREPONDERANCE of persuasion was by those advocating the bomb. Sen Millard Tydings (D., Md.,) chairman of the armed services committee gave voice to what the majority of presidential advisers was thinking.

He urged that the U. S. proceed with manufacture of the bomb, declaring that failure to do so could invite attack. But President Truman was probably thinking of the horrible and utter devastation, the incalculable deaths, the vast destruction which would be hurled upon enemy and innocent alike.

BROTHERHOOD:
Renewed Effort

Brotherhood Week, sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, will be observed from February 19-26, marking the annual observance of an event that has grown into national significance.

In accepting the honorary chairmanship of Brotherhood Week, President Truman urged "all Americans to ponder well the true meaning of brotherhood" adding that "there probably has never been a time in history when true brotherhood was so indispensable to the welfare of our own nation and to the peace and freedom of the entire world."

BROTHERHOOD WEEK
SPONSORED BY THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS
FEBRUARY 19 to 26

IN A SIMILAR VEIN, former Secretary of the Navy John L. Sullivan, named general chairman of the national observance, interpreted this year's event. "The big question today is whether the human spirit will remain free or whether it is to be enslaved by totalitarianism," Sullivan declared. "The dignity of man is on trial throughout the world," he continued, "and the fate of our civilization may well depend upon the outcome. It will survive only if the ideal of man's inalienable rights is acknowledged, respected and strengthened."

First established in 1934 by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Brotherhood Week has been celebrated each year during the week of George Washington's birthday as a special period when the people of all faiths in the United States are invited to consider together the need and implications of good will among Protestants, Catholics and Jews.

IN 1934, some 300 communities across the United States participated in Brotherhood Week events; in 1943 there were 800 communities.

In 1944 the number spiralled to 2,000. The figure today is impossible to estimate, according to Sullivan, so widespread is the desire of Americans of all faiths to demonstrate their loyalty to the basic ideals of respect for people and human rights which are essential to our way of life.

As observed with growing community participation each year, Brotherhood Week dramatizes the practical things which people can do to promote understanding and realization of time-honored American principles.

Steel Defender

Benjamin Fairless, president of U. S. steel, testified before a joint congressional economic committee in defense of the recent increases in the price of steel. He called the rise "modest," laid the blame largely on union pensions.

HOUSING:
$8,000 Units

Could the American individual in search of a new home afford to pay $8,000 for it? Federal housing officials believe that to be a fair figure and Raymond M. Foley, housing administrator, explained to the house banking committee a bill for federal housing aid based on that premise.

FOLEY STATED that the administration is considering construction, through cooperatives and other non-profit organizations, of some 250,000 housing units on an average cost of $8,000 each.

The homes envisioned in the program would be for families with annual cash incomes of $2,800 and $4,000. One third of the urban families of the nation had incomes within that "middle-income" range in 1948.

The endeavor, even in the eyes of the severest critics, appeared laudable, but with the cost of living as it is and high income taxes for families without above-average exemptions, would still put the $8,000 home out of reach of many.

AS AN INSTANCE of that supposition, Foley said average monthly payments would be about $69. That's $828 a year. Add a $1,000 food, meat and milk bill, and the total outlay for the new home owner is $1,828. This would leave the $2,800 a year man $972. Taking average figures, utilities, health costs, insurance, clothing, transportation (there would be nothing with which to pay for a car) recreation and incidentals would amount to about $516. This would leave some $400, or less than $40 a month with which to meet emergencies or other needs.

So, it is easily apparent that the $8,000 house, the $69 monthly payment and cost-of-living items would run the $2,800-a-year man so close to the edge, that he'd hardly have anything left for a pack of butts each week.

HOMELESS:
Break for DP's

An easement of the present law which limits entry of displaced persons into the United States to 205,000 in the two-year period ending June 30, this year, has been approved by the Senate judiciary committee.

THAT GROUP voted to permit 320,000 homeless foreigners to enter this country by June 30, 1951. This includes the approximately 124,000 who already have entered.

The committee voted by 10 to 3 to approve a bill which would make other changes in the present DP law which President Truman has urged.

For example, it would shift the date by which displaced persons must have entered European DP camps to be eligible for entry into this country. The present law fixed the date for December, 1945. The bill which the committee approved would change that to January 1, 1949.

THE ACTION came on the eve of the date which the senate had ordered the committee to report out a DP bill.

The house bill has been approved by the committee over the protests of Chairman McCarran (D., Nev.), who was in Europe at the time. After a heated floor fight, the senate sent the measure back to committee.

DRAFT LAW:
Bickering Starts

Atomic stockpiles . . . hydrogen bombs . . . billions for defense . . . incredible speed in the air . . . all these added up to a readily apparent conception that U.S. policy is committed to a course which believed that he is "best defended who is best armed."

The question was: Would the compulsory military service system be retained? The question of manpower remained an intangible factor.

Effective Cough Syrup, Home-Mixed for Extra Economy
Saves Big Dollars. No Cooking.
This splendid recipe is used by millions because it makes such an effective medicine for coughs due to colds. It's so easy to mix—a child could do it.
From any druggist get 2½ ounces of Pinex, a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its soothing effect on throat and bronchial irritations.
Then make a syrup with two cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Put the Pinex into a pint bottle and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of cough medicine, very effective and quick-acting, and you get about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and children love its pleasant taste.
This cough syrup takes hold of coughs, giving quick relief. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, helps clear air passages. Money refunded if Pinex doesn't please.
FOR EXTRA CONVENIENCE GET NEW READY-MIXED, READY-TO-USE PINEX!

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES
As we get older, stress and strain, over-exertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.
If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While these symptoms may often otherwise occur, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR . . .
by HOMER CROY

Driving home along a country road amid the scenes of his youth, Homer Croy—older, wiser now—recalled the people he had known, the friends he had had as a child. A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, he remembered happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their two daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his childhood playmate. Then he remembered the Adventure—the time Newt, returning from town in his two-wheeled, one-seated cart, saw a mover wagon in the road ahead. The movers were people returning from western Nebraska where "cheap land," unimproved claims could be bought for little or nothing.

CHAPTER V

But we knew that next fall, or the next, or the next the movers would come back—"hailed out," or "droughted out," but never rained out, for there was never enough rain on the western Nebraska hardpan. But nothing ever discouraged them in their quest for "cheap lands"; the next time they would try South Dakota, North Dakota, or the valley of the Little Big Horn.

What did make it unusual was that the wagon was pulled off to the side of the road. Resting the team, maybe. But as he came closer, three children ran into the middle of the road and joined hands as if to keep him from passing. One of the children was sobbing, all were gesticulating wildly and repeating over and over, "Ma! Ma!" They were unusually ragged and dirty, even for mover children; there was no doubt something was wrong. Sometimes fearful tragedies had come to families in their efforts to live on cheap land.

The wagon had two thin, half-starved horses, a weather-beaten canvas top with crude patches, and there was a chicken coop roped on behind.

He mounted a hub. Writhing on a soiled feather bed on the floor of the wagon was a woman. "Help me!" she moaned pitifully when she saw Newt. Another paroxysm seized her.

He rushed to the nearest house, but there was no answer to his knocks or his shouts. Then began the busiest, the most demanding, the most breathless hour of his life. For he opened the door, went in, piled wood into the stove, heated water, snatched up rags, cloths, soap and whatever he could find and raced back to the mover wagon.

At last, it was all over.

He tied his horse and cart behind, got the children into the wagon, and picked up the lines.

Later Mrs. Kennedy and the children saw a mover wagon coming down the road. This was not unusual. They looked again. The man sitting in front seemed a bit like Newt. But, of course, this was impossible. The team plodded closer. Then, to their utter astonishment, the man on the seat waved.

"Good land!" gasped Mrs. Kennedy. "That's your father!"

The wagon came steadily on. In front of the house it stopped.

"We've got company!" called Newt cheerfully, for now the strain was over and he could relax.

Mrs. Kennedy looked at the dirty, half-starved, unkempt children, then climbed up on the hub and peered in.

"What do you think we ought to do, Minnie?"

"We must get her into the house," she said unhesitatingly.

The problem of getting the woman into the house was accomplished by putting her into a rocking chair and carrying her.

At last it was over. The woman was asleep and so was the baby.

Down the road came the doctor's buggy; behind was a man on horseback with a black, flopping, soiled hat on his head. The doctor and the man had only to follow the wagon tracks.

The doctor came in and set his black satchel on a chair. He added to the things Newt and Mrs. Kennedy had done. But, in the main, Newt had done a good job. "She'll have to stay where she is for some days."

Newt and Mrs. Kennedy glanced at each other. Well! What had they let themselves in for?

It was as if a cyclone had struck the house; and, in a small way, it was indeed a cyclone, for the house was upset; a thousand things, during the next few days, had to be done; the whole family had to work for, and take care of, the strangers who had so suddenly—and dramatically—been thrust upon them.

The man—Tom Davey, his name turned out to be—was chiefly a misfit; in spite of having already had three children, he did not seem to be able to do anything to help with the new one. When the baby cried at night, Mrs. Kennedy was the one who took care of it; and of the woman, too. "I was just never real handy at such things," said the man.

The Tom Daveys Take Their Leave

Instead of crying less, the baby seemed to cry more. The family became fretful and snappish. Tom Davey said he felt real sorry to be so much trouble, but guessed there wasn't nothing anybody could do about it. Children was always more or less bother; especially when fresh born. But the mother thought the child was dear.

Newt talked to the man about cheap land. There wasn't any such thing, Newt said. That day was gone; and cheap land had never been a success. But the old tradition of the pioneer West was too strong for Tom Davey. There was still cheap land left. He was goin' back to Illinois, get him work for a year or two, then head west again and try his luck.

"You'll be droughted out," said Newt. "Try to get you a black loam farm, even if you have to start in a small way. Stay in the corn belt section. That's where the money is."

Tom shook his head, "I'm goin' back and I'm goin' to try 'er again. I'll have me a big cheap-land farm yet."

Came the day of going. The woman was on the spring seat beside Tom, the baby in her arms. Tom picked up the lines and shook them over the still mangy, rack-ribbed sway-backed team. "Well, you folks sure been awful kind to us. We ain't goin' to forget it soon. When I pull west again, maybe we'll come by and say howdy. Get up!" The team leaned in their collars, the wagon went creaking into the highway.

Mrs. Kennedy stood looking after the retreating wagon, touched and moved and stirred by their going.

Monday night was the night Newt wrote "The One-Horse Farmer." We all dreaded for the night to come, yet we wouldn't have missed it for anything.

He was "neighborhood correspondent" for our country weekly. For this he received a free subscription and fifty cents a week. There, in a little square pasteboard box on the center table for everybody to see, was the pile of stamped and self-addressed envelopes furnished by the newspaper. It was an honor to have such a pile of envelopes on a center table.

Ida would sit up here. "I know one that's going to be."

I was thrilled to be so close to someone who could put words on paper and then, a few days later, have them appear magically in print.

Monday was the night the neighborhood news had to be written; this would give it just time to get in that week's paper.

'One-Horse Farmer' Gets Some Inspiration

He was the best correspondent in the paper, for he not only told the news but put fun into the items. He had a vein of true humor and managed to get this into his neighborhood news. Most correspondence was stodgy, but not Newt's. At the end he put a poem; everybody remembered them and quoted them, or they expressed just what we believed. One was:

A bull unpenned,
Is a danger no end.

Another was:

Fretting over weather's lack,
Never filled an empty sack.

Another:

Keep away from trees and fences
When a thunderstorm commences.

All correspondents signed names; they used such names as "The Listener," "Aunt Polly," "Blue Eyes," "Sunbonnet Sue," "Ben-Hur," and so on. But not Newt. He signed himself "The One-Horse Farmer"; this made everybody laugh, for it would take three horses at the very least to operate a farm; five would be better.

Newt's correspondence made him important in town on Saturdays. People would come up to him and tell how they had read something by the One-Horse Farmer. He would stand, pulling at his big brown hands, immensely pleased, but pretending he hadn't written the item. "That sounds interestin'. I'll look it up when I get home." When the Kennedy family went to the back end of the grocery store to eat dinner, there would be other families sitting at the tables the grocery furnished. Everybody smiled and looked at Newt in a friendly, laughing way.

When it came time to write up the neighborhood news, a dramatic ceremony would take place. All the family would be in the sitting room, Grandpa in the corner, his gnarled hands locked in his lap. Newt would turn up the wick, haul out his pocket knife and sharpen his pencil, then carefully arrange his writing tablet in front of him. There he would sit looking at the tablet. Then he would gaze up at the ceiling and down into the coal scuttle and at the floor, all the time scowling fearfully.

"Dog-gone it! I can't think of a thing. I tell you nothing's happened. Nothing a-tall," he would say mournfully.

He would get up and go to the kitchen; the tin dipper would rattle in the cedar bucket.

Coming back, he would sink dejectedly into his chair. "I'm goin' to give it up. There's nothing this week, absolutely nothing."

"Has anybody died?" Grandpa would ask. He was always thinking about people dying.

Newt would shake his head. "Not a soul," he would say mournfully.

"Has anyone gone anywhere?" Mrs. Kennedy would ask.

Nobody had.

"Is there anybody sick?" Grandpa would ask.

Newt would shake his head again. "There hasn't been a doctor in the neighborhood all winter."

"Is there any news about the teacher?" Mrs. Kennedy would ask.

"Not a thing," Newt would say in the same gloomy, despondent voice.

Grandpa would unlock his hands, then lock them in a new position, "Any Bang's disease?"

"I want to get something a little more cheerful than Bang's disease, Pa. Any marriages?"

Ida would sit up here. "I know one that's going to be."

"Have they announced?"

"Not yet."

"Can't we say they're going together?" asks Ida. "Everybody is interested in people going together."

"Engagements and marriages, what we've got to stick to."

Newt would get up and put some coal in the base-burner, then sit down heavily and despondently.

We would all get gloomier and gloomier; the clock on the shelf would tick very loud.

Ho, Hum!—Time For Me to Go

Newt throws down the pencil in disgust. "I'm goin' to write and tell him there is no news. I shouldn't ever have undertaken this job anyway."

He runs his hands through his hair; he squirms in his chair, going through the tortures of the damned: "It's the hardest money I earn," he moans. "I wish I'd never got in it."

The dog gets up and lies down in a new place.

"I know!" Harlan suddenly exclaims. "The wolf hunt!"

We all look at one another in astonishment. Why hadn't we thought of this before?

Once or twice a winter a wolf hunt was organized; men with dogs and guns went across the hills and draws until a wolf was turned up. The one who shot him got to take his ears to town.

"Of course!" cries Newt, delighted. "That's exactly it. Who's goin'?"

He begins to write as fast as he can; no hair rumpling now.

"The shivaree!" Ida calls out.

Her father looks at her admiringly. "Of course! Why didn't we think of that? I can get in some funny touches there. Any window lights broken?"

His pencil flies across the paper . . . he is stuck . . . goes on again.

Ideas are leaping in the room; even Grandpa can think of something besides who is sick. "Wait! slow up!" cries Newt. "You're going too fast for me."

He pauses, reads aloud. We all laugh, for no one had the touch he had. Newt beams with pleasure. "I got a good scald on that one, didn't I?" He turns to Mrs. Kennedy. "Minnie, what is that tricky way of spelling fallow, meaning the inside of a tire?"

"F-e-l-l-o-e."

"Webster must have had some fun when he thought that up." He turns the pencil from end to end, rubs out a letter and writes in the correct one.

At last Newt is finished and reads the items aloud; they are a day-by-day history of our neighborhood; and there is his own humor and philosophy and there is life as he sees it. His voice has an excited, resounding quality. He pauses. "Is that word just right?"

We discuss the word. I am thrilled. Oh how wonderful—how completely satisfying—it is to have the only word that will do!

He lays down the pages, almost tenderly, so proud, so vastly pleased. "I think that's the best 'Farmer' I ever wrote." He beams. "A lot of people are goin' to mention it."

"You mustn't get your head turned," says Mrs. Kennedy.

"Oh pshaw! I guess I won't," says Newt modestly.

Eats now, cookies and apples. There we sit, looking into the isinglass, an apple in one hand and a cookie in the other, eating as hard as we can. It is nice.

The dog gets up and stretches, first one hind leg, then the other.

Mrs. Kennedy is the practical one. "Are the soapstones warm?"

We all look at the soapstones.

Time for me to go. Newt puts the pages into the stamped and self-addressed envelope. "Homer, do you mind pushin' this into the mailbox?" Mind? Why, it would be an honor!

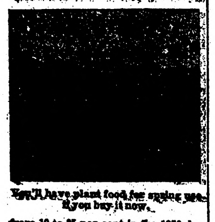
Fertilizer Bought Now Can Be Safely Stored On Farm Until Spring

Buying fertilizer now and storing it on your farm this winter is one sure way of having on hand all the plant food you need for the 1950 crop season, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out.

Agricultural economists say such a procedure is particularly advisable right now in view of prospects for a bigger demand for fertilizer in 1950. U. S. Department of Agriculture indicates there may be a rise of from 10 to 25 per cent in the 1950 demand for plant food. So it is important to act promptly if you want to be certain of having plant food when you want it.



You'll have plant food for spring use if you buy it now.

Good quality fertilizer can be satisfactorily stored on farms during the winter. It can be kept in good condition until spring planting time, if a few simple precautions are followed. Dr. H. B. Cheney, extension agronomist of Iowa State College, offers these suggestions on winter storage:

1—Store fertilizer sacks only in a barn or some other dry building that has flooring off the ground; 2—If you have to use earth or concrete floors, stack fertilizer bags on a crib of blocks and boards; 3—Keep the piles close together, if sacks are of burlap. This will reduce the circulating of air from which fertilizer may soak up moisture; 4—Prevent caking by piling sacks only seven or eight high; 5—Keep broken bags separate from the main pile. Loose fertilizer soaks up moisture faster than that in a bag.

Washington's Colonial Home

George Washington's colonial home, Mount Vernon, has not been a residence for many years, nor has it been owned by a member of the Washington family for three quarters of a century, says the Washington Star.

Mrs. Eleanor Washington Howard, daughter of John Augustine Washington, the illustrious Washington's great-grandnephew, was the last private owner of the estate. She first saw the world from the most historic home in America in 1856.

Though General Washington's slaves, numbering more than 150, were freed by his will, his nephew, Bushrod Washington, who inherited Mount Vernon, John Augustine Washington Bushrod's nephew, and his son, John Augustine Washington, Jr., who in turn fell heirs to the estate, were slave owners.

Today, survivors of the last generation of negro folk born in the slave quarters of the old manor are proud that their slave parents served in the ancestral home of the Washingtons. Somehow, they give realism to the farm which George Washington owned and which they helped to care for, as young men. These white - haired men declare there never was any depression at the old farm where the nights were festivals with the singing of "Roll, Jordan, Roll," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and "Steal Away, to Jesus."

George Washington, who is said to have been worth several hundred thousand dollars in today's values, had a salary of $25,000 a year during his presidency and added resources brought to him by his marriage with the rich Martha Custis. With such wealth he was able to keep his estate of 8,000 acres in fine condition. This was despite the fact that he was constantly entertaining visitors.

By the time the property was inherited by John Augustine Washington, his nephew, in 1829, the plantation had been reduced to 1,225 acres, only about 100 acres of which were suitable for farming. When his son, John Augustine Washington Jr., came into possession of the estate in 1860, after his mother's death, he realized that such wealth as his great-uncle George had possessed was required to restore Mount Vernon and maintain it in its former splendor.

According to tradition a Miss Ann Pamela Cunningham of South Carolina, who was a Potomac boat passenger about the time when John A. Washington wished to sell Mount Vernon, became so impressed with the tolling of the bell and the historical importance of George Washington's home that she became active in working for the purchase of the estate.

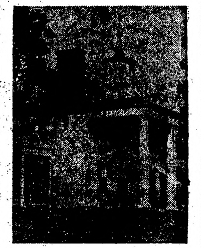
In 1858 the organization she had formed as the Mount Vernon Ladies' association of the Union contracted to buy the mansion and the patriotic appeal of the women and the efforts of Senator Edward Everett of Massachusetts, who toured the country and raised $68,294.59, Mount Vernon was actually purchased in 1860 for a shrine. Then the Washington family left the estate.

With breaking out of the Civil war, Miss Cunningham appealed to the commanders of both armies to preserve Mount Vernon. As both General Scott and General Lee gave orders that no armed man should enter the estate, the shrine was self-protected, the only neutral spot in the United States.

For several years members of at least four families of the Mt. Vernon slaves remained to care for the place, in the employ of the association. Some of the children grew up there and a few of the adults stayed long enough to gain the title of "aunty" or "uncle," which was a typical Southern respect for an aged negro.

For a while after the war visitors to Mount Vernon are said to have practiced such vandalism that they wrote their names over its walls and ceilings. Plaster was removed by those who cut pieces of laths as souvenirs, and even glass was broken in the cupola by those who wished to take away pieces of the famous home.

Today Mount Vernon, a national shrine, is a perfectly preserved plantation with mansion, greenhouse, kitchen, servant's quarters, coach house, smoke house, dairy, spinning house, carpenter's house, gardener's house and plantation office.



Washington's Colonial Home Now a National Shrine.

Perhaps the estate's closest touch with Washington are the beautiful trees in the grounds near the mansion which were planted either by General Washington or by his direction.

If the ancient ashes, beeches, buckeyes, hemlocks, coffee beans, elms, lindens, mulberry and the many venerable holly trees could speak, they would tell much about George Washington's life as a country gentleman.

* * *

America's most famous home, Mount Vernon, underwent not one but two major enlargements during the ownership of the First American who believed apparently, that the first duty of an American citizen to his family was to provide a comfortable home, according to a writer in the Washington Post.

When first built, about 1743, the Virginia home was an unpretentious plantation house of one and one-half stories, comprising the central section of the present mansion.

Just before his marriage to Martha Custis in 1759, Washington "renovized" the dwelling into a house of two and one-half stories by adding one complete story, but did not increase the floor area.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

See where a bank in Denver is putting in left-handed checkbooks. They figure their southpaw depositors deserve just as much consideration as the right handers.

Time was when it was believed that left-handed people had no right to exist at all. If a youngster showed signs of using his left hand, his parents were supposed to break him of the habit—to force him to use his right.

But today most doctors will tell you that changing a child's natural left-handed tendency usually causes more harm than good. Stammering and other nervous disorders often get their start that way with children.

From where I sit, if a man wants to use his left hand—that's his business. It's not such a good idea to make anyone do things our way, just because we think it's right. Personally, I think a mellow glass of beer is the finest beverage on earth. If you happen to prefer a Coke—why, go to it! Only leave me the same freedom of choice, won't you?

Robert Visits Washington, D. C.

More than 300 Farmers Union members including Robert Davidson, called on Congressmen and Senators in Washington this week in behalf of the Brannan Plan, REA appropriations, a more extensive rural roads program and other agricultural measures.

The group reported that sentiment for the Brannan Plan is mounting in face of the failure of the Anderson farm bill to check a series decline in farm income. Prospects are for liberal REA appropriations, including loans funds for generation and transmission of power, although a fight is in prospect over the latter.

Robert Davidson and the group called on Senator Humphrey. They also saw Congressman Harold C. Hagen, Fred Marshall Blatnick and Weir.

The group met with members of the House and Senate Agriculture Committees. The four day stay in Washington included trips to many historic places in and around the city including George Washington's home at Mt. Vernon, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the World Food and Agriculture Organization, the capital and government offices.

Many Welfare Jobs Now Open

Earl L. Kaliher, Executive Secretary of the Marshall County Welfare Board, announced today that many vacancies exist in county welfare staffs throughout the State.

"Our office staff is complete and we do not anticipate any openings in the near future, but many counties are seeking qualified clerical and accounting employees," Mr. Kaliher said.

Examinations are now being scheduled by the Minn. County Welfare Merit System, and the vacancies will be filled by applicants who pass these examinations.

Applications should be submitted by March 3, 1950. Application forms and additional information concerning these examinations may be obtained at the county welfare office at Warren, any local office of the State Employment Service or by writing to the Merit System Supervisor, 117 University Avenue, St. Paul.

Teamwork of All Plant Nutrients Needed to Make High Crop Yields

Plant nutrients have to "play ball" together to make high crop yields possible, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out. Each element has its work to do. Each reinforces the other. None can do the whole crop-feeding job by itself.

"All nutrients must be in balanced supply to give you top yields," the Committee says. "You can't increase crop production by adding only one plant food element when others are short. If your soil has plenty of phosphate and potash, but is short of nitrogen, you won't get good yields unless you supply that nitrogen. And the same is true of phosphate and potash, respectively."

"University of Illinois agronomists demonstrated that it takes the combined teamwork of lime, nitrogen, phosphate and potash to get maximum corn yields. They made their tests on nutrient-deficient soils at the Brownstown field.

"A plot that had no fertilizer yielded only 14.7 bushels of corn per acre. When nitrogen alone was added, the yield was 14.3 bushels. Adding phosphate brought the yield up to 24.8 bushels because the soil got some nitrogen from clovers in the rotation. When potash alone was added, the corn yield was 11.9 bushels per acre. Liming brought the yield up to 31 bushels. When lime, nitrogen, phosphate and potash all were added in balanced supply, the yield rose to 46 bushels per acre."

Health Group Annual Meeting

Members of the Holt Co'op Creamery Health Group have received more than $5,500 in benefits for hospitalization and surgical care during 1949. This information was disclosed by Mr. Paulson, field representative of Group Health Mutual, at the group's annual meeting held last Friday.

His report indicated the special features of Group Health protection:

1. Member ownership and control, with machinery such as local health groups, and representative annual meetings through which the membership can make its voice effective in establishing policies.
2. Continuing protection for all members established by action of the membership to guarantee that protection will not be canceled for any reason except fraud. In other words, a member whose hospital expenses run high cannot be dropped.
3. Non-profit operation, with all premiums above operating expenses devoted to benefits and surpluses needed to guarantee benefits.
4. Complete free choice of hospitals and doctors, with no discrimination in benefits.
5. Liberal allowance for hospital services, including those like x-ray, which are costly and frequently used.

Ray Gusa was elected president of the Health Group: Edgar Wegge, vice president; Glenn Peterson secretary-treasurer. Chester Larson and Glenn Peterson will represent the group at a district meeting and statewide meeting to be held in April.

The farmers in this area purchased a carload of surplus potatoes for livestock feed here on Monday.

Supplement To The Final Report of The Marshall County School Survey Committee

Amendment No. 4. - Passed February 16, 1950.

By Amendment No. 4 the Marshall County School Survey Committee amends its Final Survey Report of November 1, 1948 as follows:

A. The newly organized Consolidated School District No. 35 (Holt area), originally assigned to the Newfolden proposed district in the final report of the survey committee, is hereby removed from further reorganization plans, and will retain its present organization as a consolidated elementary school district.

B. Common School District No 58, originally assigned to Newfolden proposed district in the final report, is hereby removed from reorganization plans, and will retain its present organization as a common school district.

C. The strip of unorganized territory comprising sections 4-9-16 in East Valley Township, originally included in the proposed district as described in the final report, is hereby removed from reorganization plans, and will retain the status of unorganized territory.

Ringworm in Cattle

Wildfire spread of ringworm, a fungus-caused skin disease, often occurs during the winter in herds of young cattle crowded into damp, poorly lighted barns. Scrubbing the quarters with a solution of lye dissolved in boiling hot water is one step in preventing it. Good ventilation, plenty of natural or electric light, and a coat of whitewash over the interior of the barn are other important factors in safeguarding cattle against this disease.

Shipping Fever Carriers

An animal which recovers from an attack of shipping fever is likely to remain a carrier of the disease, yet it is impossible to detect carriers just by looking at them. This explains some of the outbreaks that occur after a number of animals from different sources are brought together or after new individuals with unknown histories are added to a herd.

Hit The Spot

In behind-the-scenes areas of factories, stores and service shops, a white-painted corner frequently promotes better housekeeping. Indicating the location of a trash receptacle, such a white spot suggests subconsciously that workers take good aim and reveals the presence of dirt that should be removed.

Clean Milk

The dairyman's job is not only to produce clean milk, but also to cool it and protect it until it is delivered to the plant. Clean cows, clean utensils, single service strainer pads, mechanical milk coolers, hot water heaters, and a good milk house are all essential to clean milk production.

Children's Game

A new way for children to play "Pin the Tail on the Donkey" is to attach small pieces of transparent cellophane tape on each tail for sticking purposes instead of using pins. The donkey, of course, may be fastened to the wall with the same tape.

Body's Composition

The human body contains about 65 per cent of oxygen, 18 per cent of carbon, 10 per cent of hydrogen and 3 per cent of nitrogen. It also contains calcium and phosphorus, for which the estimated amounts vary greatly.

Leghorn Hats

"Leghorn" hats take their name from the Italian port of Leghorn, or Livorno to the Italians, through which they long have been shipped. However, the hats actually are produced in Fiesole, a suburb of inland Florence.

Finish for Typewriters

Typewriters, like all business machines, require a durable finish with good adhesion that will resist use and wear. Such a finish must resist abrasion and retain its original color, sheen and attractiveness for a long time.

Intercity Mail

For carrying 6 per cent of the intercity first class mail, airlines in 1948 received $41,000,000, while the railroads received only $26,000,000 for carrying the other 94 per cent.

Wash Before Repainting

Old woodwork should be thoroughly washed before repainting, using one of the new detergents on one of the prepared paint cleaning compounds available at a paint store.

Great Smokies

For 36 consecutive miles, the Great Smoky mountains of North Carolina are over 5,000 feet high. The ridge includes 16 peaks over 6,000 feet high.

Remodeling

The answer to whether you should remodel your house is probably no—if it is more than 75 years old, has a poor foundation, weak framing and excessively high ceilings.

New York Potatoes

Commercial potato growers in New York state have an allotment of 84,300 acres in 1950. Of this total, Long Island has 44,200 acres and Upstate, 40,100 acres.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

British Laborites Face Major Test; Lewis, Miners Clash With Old Foe; U.S. to Continue Egg-Price Support

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BRITAIN:

Warning Sounded

The pledge of Anthony Eden, British deputy Conservative leader, who, with Winston Churchill and other party big-wigs in today's election, is hoping to overthrow the Labor party, that the Conservatives will work with all nations for peace, might have meant more than it indicated.

EDEN, being the astute world diplomat that he is, must know that there are elements in many places, particularly the United States, who feel that there must be no further support of power for the Labor party in England.

With the Laborites' position often regarded as the fostering of socialism, the more conservative people everywhere fear it. It has been an amazing thing to most students of world history how the British, traditionally jealous of their liberties, ever permitted the imposition of this kind of government upon them. A reduction of the answer to fundamentals might explain that it came about only through the economic distress of the once proud and mighty empire.

IT IS APPARENTLY assured that whatever the outcome, the Labor party faces its severest test in today's election.

Eden warned, in the first broadcast of a Conservative speech in the just-ended campaign, that the "United Nations is at its lowest ebb, the democracies are forced to pay dearly for armaments, and the nightmare of communism stalks through Asia." He made a telling point in recalling that the Labor party in 1945 declared that if it were returned to power, it could get along with the Russians because of its Socialist ideology—and how the world situation had gone from bad to worse since then.

OPPOSITION SPEAKER Laborite Fuel Minister Hugh Gaitskill, had told an audience at Leeds that the cost of socialism was high in Britain, and would remain high, but declared the cost worthwhile because under the Labor government acute poverty has really been abolished."

That was a debatable point about which the argument continued while Britain voted.

EGG PRICES:

No Humpty Dumpty

The American egg situation had no chance to rival the nursery Humpty Dumpty story, inasmuch as federal price supports were fixed so that no such fall as occured to the nursery-rhyme egg could happen to this modern counterpart.

THE GOVERNMENT, which already owns some 100 million dollars worth of eggs intended to keep on buying them through March of this year. The idea was to support the price at an average of 25 cents a dozen on the farm.

The government's policy was quaintly stated by one federal official who summed it up with: "The hens are laying their fool heads off."

The farm price of 25 cents a dozen was about 75 per cent of parity, a level calculated to be equally fair to producers and consumers. Producers of dried eggs, the statement said, would continue to get about 95 cents a pound.

Most of the eggs the government buys are dried. In the past two years it has accumulated about 73 million pounds of these eggs, most at a price of $1.26 a pound. Some are stored in a cool cave near Atchinson, Kansas. The rest are in warehouses in other sections of the country.

THE QUESTION of what to do with them has become the major problem. The law permits the department of agriculture to give them away if they are kept out of commercial, competitive channels This restricts them to welfare purposes and similar uses.

TAXATION:

Get 'Em All

The treasury of the United States wants to put the tax bite on a lot of organizations which are not now paying any income tax on the operation of unrelated businesses.

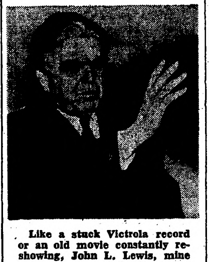
The treasury made a request to congress that this be done, asserting that some labor unions, business leagues, social clubs and charitable and educational organizations were getting away with nonpayment of tax that the treasury insists should be paid.

Vance N. Kirby, the treasury's tax-legislative counsel, made it clear, however, that the administration tax program did not contemplate such tax treatment of religious bodies, except as they might be affected in the operation of educational institutions.

He said the proposals would apply to labor unions, business leagues and social clubs.

He also emphasized that the tax recommendation was concerned only with "business income which is not incident or related to the exempt purpose."

Thundering Again



Like a stuck Victrola record or an old movie constantly re-showing, John L. Lewis, mine union czar, was in the news again, this time with another coal strike on the boards. Lewis gestures as he appears before the conference table during contract renewal talks which broke down.

PIT MEN:

An Old Foe

An old and hated enemy was again at grips with John L. Lewis and his United Mine workers. After a delay which brought him sharp criticism, President Harry Truman had turned to the device he declares he hates in order to bring order out of the coal strike chaos.

THERE WERE MANY who had begun to wonder if Mr. Truman—known for the stubbornness he employs when balked—ever would resort to the T-H law to resolve the mine deadlock. Now that he has, it would cause much delight in the ranks of the political opposition.

The T-H law, however regarded, has been used several times in national emergencies with an effect that gives it a real cause for being, whether anyone likes it or not.

The miners, however, showed defiance. They still chanted the old traditional refrain: "No contract —no work." And it looked like a contract agreement was far off as the President named a three-member board of inquiry who would attempt to restore peace in the troubled situation.

TO THE BOARD, President Truman named David L. Cole, Patterson, N. J., attorney who headed a similar board in 1948 that settled a bitter contract row between Lewis and the operators: John Dunlop, Harvard university business school, and a veteran in labor management relations; and W. Willard Wirtz, Northwestern university law professor and former chairman of the wage stabilization board.

Theirs would be the difficult job, because John L. Lewis was a difficult man to deal with. He might be even more difficult since his three-day work week had reduced the nation's coal stockpile to a two-week supply at the time of the strike.

RED H-BOMB:

Terrific Echo

There was a sudden and dramatic interruption in all the talk about the hydrogen—or H-bomb. Just as everyone was pondering the fate of a world on which the monstrous weapon might be loosed, along came a report that the Russians already had it.

The reporter was an Englishman, a Mr. de Courcy, who claimed that he had secret sources inside the iron curtain which told him whatever was going on.

THE CLAIM was a bit rugged for the average American to accept, inasmuch as there was still no actual proof the Reds ever had the atomic bomb. Still, it was a nice, frightening topic of talk, and discussion was rather widespread.

Naturally, the first impulse was a great rushing to revamp all Atlantic defense plans and, perhaps more naturally, to talk of greater U. S. outlay of arms for herself and the pact nations.

Amid all the excitement ran an undercurrent of spy thrills and national menace with the disclosure that a German physicist, who had worked with the British in developing the A-bomb, had given secret information concerning that weapon to the Russians.

Good Omen?

As jitters mounted over reported leaks and treasonable acts concerning the secrets of the hydrogen bomb, apprehensive officials and citizens were further disturbed by reports that a former clerk in the French consulate at Stettin, Poland, had confessed he had led an espionage network that obtained information on British military movements. He was identified as Andre Simon Robineau.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Leaky Porch Floor

QUESTION: My cellar goes under the front porch and the porch floor leaks. The cellar also is cold at that spot. What would be the best way to seal the wood porch floor and to insulate under the floor? I was thinking about using a gypsum board as insulation. Would that insulate against cold?

ANSWER: To make the wood porch floor leakproof, cover it with a roofing canvas, then paint it with a good-quality floor paint. If insulation is desired, place a blanket or batt type of insulation between the floor joists on the underside of the porch floor.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

Homer Croy blinked back tears as he drove along the country road amid the scenes of his youth. A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, he was going "home." Back to the Kennedy place but 10 minutes from his home. He remembers the happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their two daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his childhood pal. He remembers the Delinskys, the "foreigners" who bought the scrubby farm behind the poor farm; shiftless Tom Davey and his long-suffering family, befriended by the Kennedys before the Daveys headed west again; "The One-Horse Farmer" (Newt), correspondent for the county weekly.

CHAPTER VI

I start out across the snow. Rabbits go hopping through the moonlight. Sleep sounds come up from the barn; the mules are at it again. The weathervane creaks.

There is the box on a post in the snow. I push the letter into it with my own hands.

The girls' room was on the second floor, over the sitting room. There was an opening in the floor so that the pipe from the base-burner could come through; around the pipe was an iron grillwork with acorns on it. When it was time for the girls to get up, Newt rapped on the pipe with a poker; in the winter the girls would stand over the iron grillwork. Sometimes the girls would hate to get up and would decide to stay a few minutes longer. Newt never rapped a second time. He would open the stair door and start up; before he could take half a dozen steps, the girls would be standing over the grillwork, dressing like mad.

Ida, as I have said, was the best looking girl in our section. She should have been spoiled. But, some way or other, she managed to come through without getting her head turned. At a box supper, when the people voted for the prettiest girl at a cent a vote, Ida always won. Newt was proud of her good looks, and would take her to schoolhouses outside of our district just so Ida could be voted on. There he'd sit, when they were voting, trying not to look too pleased. But he was pleased. And so was Mrs. Kennedy.

Most of the girls had what we called a "best beau," but Ida didn't. She went with different boys and appeared to like one just about as well as another. Every Sunday there was a team at the Kennedy hitch rack. That is, until church time. Then Ida and the boy who was her best beau today would get in his rig, spread the lap robe over their knees and he'd speak to the horses.

Saturday afternoon, when the farmer boys and girls walked around the square or got acquainted in the grocery stores, Ida was the one they all wanted to meet. When she went in the short order, two or three boys always managed to come in, too. But she never seemed to have a favorite. That is until—

One day she made the acquaintance of a boy who had just come to town. His name was Lester Forkade and he had come from St. Joseph to work in a loan and abstract office. He was the best dressed young man on the streets. His shoes were exceedingly sharp-pointed; there was a black cord that ran from his straw hat down to his lapel where it was fastened into the buttonhole with a silver hook. We had never seen anything so elegant.

At first to Ida he seemed to be just another boy; but, little by little, she began to take a different kind of interest from any she had ever had in a boy. She sent to the mail-order house and got a froufrou corset.

He had never been out to see her; they walked around the square and out to the Chautauqua grounds and down to the 102 River.

Romance Enters; It Is Love?

Then he asked. A kind of family tension developed—a city boy coming to see Ida! Never had a young man from the city been on the Kennedy farm to call on a girl. In fact, hardly ever had there been a young man from town on the farm at all; town people didn't care to have much to do with farmers.

The hour was set for four o'clock Sunday afternoon; that would give them time to play croquet, have an early supper and get to church. The tension grew; everybody dressed in their best and Ida running up and down stairs getting primped. Newt had on his Congress shoes with the elastic webbing in the sides; in the back was a loop for pulling the shoes on. And he had on his celluloid collar and his bow tie; this latter was held in place by a metal grip that fastened over a brass button. He looked dressed up and, for that matter, so did all the family.

Four o'clock came, but Lester did not arrive. When a farmer said four o'clock he meant four o'clock.

Newt kept looking out the window; finally he sat down on the front porch. Even old Grandpa was dressed up and lowered himself on the edge of the porch and kept pulling out his watch. "In my day a young man came when he said he would."

Suddenly down the road came a roaring and a chugging and an automobile whirled into the drive lot. It made the chickens run for their lives. A farmer hated an automobile (automobile, we pronounced it) above everything else in the world. We had to leap out and seize the horses by the bits; there the horses would stand, shaking and blowing and white-eyed as the cursed contraptions snorted by.

Lester was dressed in a linen duster, with goggles pushed back on his cap and gauntlet gloves to keep the wind from going up his sleeves.

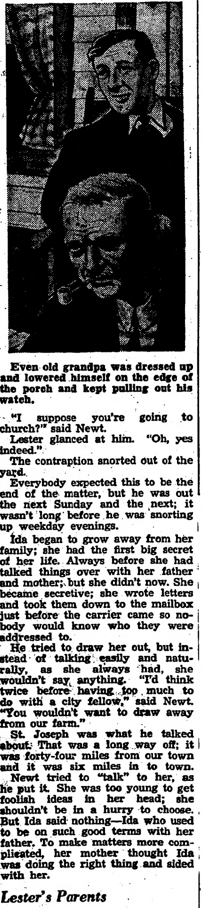
Newt shook hands politely.

Ida looked lovely and got through the introduction finely. We all stood around looking at Lester and he stood there looking at us.

The croquet game didn't go quite right; in fact, nothing went quite right; everybody felt under the strain of city company, especially with a gentleman who had an automobile. Newt tried to talk about the things Newt knew about; Lester was polite, but the conversation died away. Ida's mother got along better; it was nice to have a city man for company.

Sunday supper was always cold milk and mush, with applesauce spread on bread and butter. Ida seemed to be sensitive about how simple it was; but this was what everybody had. Lester began to tell of a world we didn't know about; a world of cities and fashionable restaurants and travel. It made us feel humble. All except Grandpa; nothing ever made proud old Grandpa feel humble. He said, "I wouldn't trade a farm for anything you got in a city."

At last it was time to start and Lester politely helped Ida in, then put on his duster and his gloves and his goggles. "I just never dreamed it," said Grandpa.



Even old grandpa was dressed up and lowered himself on the edge of the porch and kept pulling out his watch.

"I suppose you're going to church?" said Newt.

Lester glanced at him. "Oh, yes indeed."

The contraption snorted out of the yard.

Everybody expected this to be the end of the matter, but he was out the next Sunday and the next; it wasn't long before he was snorting up weekday evenings.

Ida began to grow away from her family; she had the first big secret of her life. Always before she had talked things over with her father and mother; but she didn't now. She became secretive; she wrote letters and took them down to the mailbox just before the carrier came so nobody would know who they were addressed to.

He tried to draw her out, but instead of talking easily and naturally, as she always had, she wouldn't say anything. "I'd think twice before having too much to do with a city fellow," said Newt. "You wouldn't want to draw away from our farm."

St. Joseph was what he talked about. That was a long way off; it was forty-four miles from our town and it was six miles in to town.

Newt tried to "talk" to her, as he put it. She was too young to get foolish ideas in her head; she shouldn't be in a hurry to choose. But Ida said nothing—Ida who used to be on such good terms with her father. To make matters more complicated, her mother thought Ida was doing the right thing and sided with her.

Lester's Parents Pay a Visit

One morning at breakfast Ida laid her hand on the table and said, "I guess you'll want to see this."

"I've been afraid it was coming," said Newt.

Her mother picked up Ida's hand and looked at the flashing ring. "It's lovely."

"When will it be?" asked Newt at last.

She didn't know, Ida said; they would have to talk it over.

"Where do you figure you'll live?"

They didn't know that, either. In town, someplace.

"Lester thinks he can get himself transferred to St. Joe."

Newt stopped eating. "You wouldn't favor that, would you, Ida?"

She hesitated; well, yes, she thought she would. There was so much work to do on a farm.

That was true, Newt said; but there wasn't anything like having your own land under your feet. "I take considerable satisfaction in that." He chewed a while. "I suppose there's nothing to do but adjust myself to it."

"I think she'll be happy," her mother said. "It'll be an easier life."

The automobile was in front of the house all the time now; or clunking down the road. Newt tried to like Lester and to be enthusiastic over him, for soon he was going to be a member of the family. But he didn't know what to talk to him about. Stiffness came between them. But Newt kept on trying. "I want my son-in-law to like me."

Once he said, "You're too young, Ida! A girl your age hasn't got a ripened mind."

"I'm going to marry him, whether you like it or not."

He looked at her, hurt by her sharpness. "I just never expected a child of mine to speak that way. Well, I won't meddle in."

He went out, put the lines over his shoulder and began to plow, a lone figure in the field.

Ida said that Lester's parents wanted to meet her family. A terrified look passed between Newt and Mrs. Kennedy. City people. All the way from St. Joseph. Would they be able to make a good impression on them?

There was great activity in the house, getting it cleaned and getting it ready for the people who were going to be relatives. The day arrived. Lester's parents were to come by train; he was to meet them and bring them out in a livery rig.

At last the cooking was all done; two kinds of cake were on the table and two kinds of pies. Mrs. Kennedy brought out her peacock fan and laid it across the end of the table. Everybody was dressed in their best; Grandpa had on his Union suit and Ida her city-made dress. As the hour approached everybody kept running to the window and looking down the road and coming back and sitting down again. But Mrs. Kennedy found things to do, for she was always working.

Kennedys' Company Hard to Entertain

There was the clatter of hoofbeats and down the road in a swinging trot came the livery team, with Lester driving; and there, sitting elegantly in the back seat, were his aristocratic father and mother.

Consternation seized us; things we hadn't thought of before became important. Should we go out and meet them, or wait till they got to the porch? Never had we seen such impressive people. They were looking around, sizing things up.

There was a great deal of handshaking and laughing and won't-you-sit-down? but it wasn't easy and natural. Soon, however, the company was seated on one side of the parlor and we were seated on the other side, gazing in awe at these tremendously important people, the most important we had ever seen. Lester's mother was the kind who talks a great deal and a bit gushingly; and now, looking around the room, she said the house was utterly charming; only she said cha'ming. At first we thought she had made a mistake, then we saw she hadn't. She turned to Newt.

"I think you have the quaintest place I ever saw."

No one in the world before had ever called his place quaint.

"Well," he said, anxious to do the right things, "it's comfortable."

"Don't you think it's utterly quaint, Charles?"

Mr. Forkade looked around the room. On the wall were a Harvester calendar, a yarn motto which said, "God Bless Our Home," and a framed picture of the Rock of Ages; this showed a girl clinging to a rock while a storm raged around her. We were all proud of this picture.

"It's delightful, my dear."

We all glanced at each other, for we were learning something every moment now. Nobody in our section ever said "my dear." We called them by name, or didn't call them anything at all.

Grandpa came clumping on the porch. Newt proudly introduced the old gentleman who touched his G.A.R. cap each time and said, "Pleased," then went over, sat down and began to stare through his watery old eyes.

Mrs. Forkade began to tell about the quaint characters she had met along the countryside (as she called it). We all blinked, suddenly realizing these quaint characters were our neighbors, folks we'd always known. Mr. Delinsky was the only quaint character we knew.

"How're crops in your section, Mr. Forkade?" Newt asked politely.

Mr. Forkade said he didn't know; in fact, he didn't pay much attention to agricultural matters.

"I suppose not," said Newt a new world suddenly opening before him.

He squinted and wrinkled his forehead, trying desperately to think of something that would interest the elegant Mr. Forkade. "Do you find much sickness in your community?"

He didn't, said Mr. Forkade.

Odd Things Happen At Carnegie Hall As Famous Appear

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Nearly 50 years ago a young man lectured in historic Carnegie hall on a subject which would undoubtedly serve him better at the present time. The subject was: "The War as I saw It," illustrated with lantern slides. And the lecturer was Winston Churchill, then a freshman correspondent who has escaped during the Boer war from Ladysmith, South Africa.

Churchill was only one of many great men and women who appeared on that same old stage, John J. Totten, house manager of Carnegie hall, recalls.

Carnegie hall was opened in May, 1891, with Tchaikovsky conducting the first concert. Years afterward, Tchaikovsky said of the famous Manhattan landmark:

"When I come to the stage of Carnegie hall to conduct a concert, as soon as the music begins I forget all the surroundings, for I have the impression of a sonority like a Stradivarious. . . . It is my conclusion that Carnegie hall is one among the very few best auditoriums, acoustically. It will be a pity if one day an idea should come to anyone to abolish this historically and musically ideal auditorium."

Totten, who has been with Carnegie hall for 43 years, first as an usher, next as assistant house manager and for 22 years in his present capacity, told some of the highlights of the past and a few of the more recent happenings.

In 1918, Caruso, Heifetz and Rachmaninoff occupied the stage one afternoon, lending their talents for a Red Cross benefit.

"There was a Turkish meeting one night in the hall," Totten said. They wanted to decide which city was to be the capital of Turkey. It ended in a near riot, with women using hatpins as weapons on those who did not agree with them."

Totten recalled that in 1919 the hall had its biggest flop when President Woodrow Wilson spoke there after he had returned from the peace conference in France. The hall was only half full—because, Totten explained, there were so many policemen, detectives and secret service men around the entrance that the waiting crowd could not get in.

Insect Control Vital For Top Efficiency From Fertilizer Use

CHICAGO — Uncontrolled insects and diseases can cut the efficiency of the plant food you add to your soil declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Adequate nutrition is the No. 1 essential for high yields," says the statement, "but vigilance in fighting disease and insect enemies is vital, too. That is why it is so important to control infestations of the corn borer — destructive insect pest in the Corn Belt."

The committee points out that corn stalks, left on top of the ground are excellent "homes" for corn borers over the winter and spring months.

"Unless these borers are destroyed before they emerge in the spring," it warns, "they will infest early planted corn."

Entomologists recommend the following steps for controlling corn borer infestation and promoting full yields of corn:

1—Complete plowing under of cornstalks before the moths emerge. This also has the advantage of adding organic matter to the soil.

2—Delay corn planting until after the first flight of moths.

3—High value crops such as sweet corn and hybrid seed may be profitably sprayed if planted early, according to state authorities.

Combine insect and disease control with plenty of plant food and improved soil tilth for top yields and high profits, says the committee. The soil tilth can be built up by deep-rooted legumes in the rotation. These will add organic matter, build soil structure and make the soil a better "sponge" for rainfall.

"These control measures often involve timeliness of plowing and planting" says the statement, "plus a little extra care for clean plowing.

"Their advantage lies in continuity. You may get by without them in one year. But you may have costly losses in another year."

A wide-awake warning from Sleepy Eye

"Minnesota has a little high-grade ore, a lot of low-grade deposits," writes W. E. Barnes, publisher of the Sleepy Eye Herald Dispatch. "When taxes get too high, mining interests leave low-grade ore in the ground. Prohibitive taxes on farms would force owners to milk their land. Every farmer knows that a few years of that, and the land would be so worthless it could pay practically no taxes. Such a procedure would be extremely short-sighted. It is just as short-sighted when applied to mines."

Barnes

YES, MR. BARNES, high taxes can keep Minnesota's low-grade iron ores in the ground. The reason is simple—it's because these ores are already so expensive to produce.

You see, you can't just skim off these low-grade ores and dump them in a boat. First you have to dig out from 1½ to 3 tons of crude ore for every ton you finally ship. Then you put this ore through a washing plant, a jig plant, or a plant using "heavy media separation." In short, you must actually manufacture your iron ore.

This takes extra-special skill and equipment—and extra-special cash. Each concentrating plant requires a very large investment. More than a score of them are now operating in Minnesota — taking worthless material and turning it into a valuable mineral product.

By adding millions of tons to Minnesota's useable iron ore supply, these plants create resources rather than exhaust them. New concentrating methods, now being developed, give even brighter promise. If they work out, it will be commercially possible to produce ore from this state's tremendous supply of now-unused taconite rock.

But here's where the taxes Mr. Barnes mentioned come in. With ever-increasing taxes added to the high expenses of developing and producing low-grade ores, this state could wind up with less instead of more money in its coffers. Look at this tax picture . . .

Last year the iron ore industry paid over $27 million in local and state taxes. It is by far the most heavily-taxed major industry in Minnesota. It pays general property taxes on a rate of assessment 25% to 50% higher than that used for other industries. The burden of its occupation and royalty taxes is more than three times that of the corporate income tax paid by other businesses. No other state taxes any natural resource as heavily as Minnesota taxes iron ore.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars necessary to hasten the development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

How to Get That Homework Done

Miss Gilbert, our grammar school principal, spoke the other night at the regular Parent-Teachers' meeting, on getting children to do their homework when they want to listen to the radio.

"We mustn't give them a flat 'no'," Miss Gilbert said. "If we adults really believe in tolerance and moderation, we should instill these qualities in our children. Listening to the radio is fine—in moderation—as long as homework gets done, too."

From where I sit, the lady was dead-right. This radio vs. homework problem is a wonderful way to see to it that our youngsters acquire the sensible moderate habits they'll need later on.

I've never believed in hard and fast rules—except where absolutely necessary. Let the other fellow do as he likes, as long as he's temperate and tolerant. Guess that's why I've never felt we should quarrel with the fellow who is partial to a glass of beer—the "Beverage of Moderation."

CAN DO

Give Your Home a Color Treatment

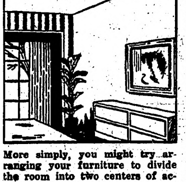
TOO MANY persons take dull and cheerless rooms for granted, seldom realizing that the addition of color to the inside of a house makes the difference between a drab and a sprightly place to live.

But more than that, color can go beyond the basic "cheerfulness" idea and can be used as a disguise for poor architectural features and other glaring room faults. If you understand what you're doing, that is.

The trick is all in knowing how and why to use contrasting colors. Here are some elementary ideas that will give you some knowledge of how to camouflage with colors:

If you are cursed with a room that is deadly square, you can make it appear more rectangular by painting or papering one or both end walls in a darker color than the side walls. A rectangular effect also can be created if furniture or built-ins are arranged to produce a center of interest on one end wall, or if adjoining windows are treated as one by clever hanging of curtains and draperies. Anything, in short, that will detract from the boring symmetry of a perfect square will be of some help.

Equally offensive as the humdrum square is a room that is too long and narrow. You can produce the effect of a more pleasing rectangle here by painting or papering the narrow end walls in dark colors to contrast with light or vertically striped side walls.



More simply, you might try arranging your furniture to divide the room into two centers of activity, enhancing this effect by allowing draperies to extend beyond the windows, thus reducing wall length.

You can give larger proportions to a small room by limiting the color scheme to two colors, keeping the furniture small and painting the woodwork to match the walls. A wallpaper of small horizontal stripes will help a lot, or you can paint one wall to match the carpet.

Too-high ceilings can be brough down by employing horizontally-striped draperies or wallpaper and painting the ceiling a dark color or the color of the carpet. A more expensive alternative is to put wainscoting on the walls, with a scenic wallpaper above, setting this effect off with bookcases or long, low built-ins along one wall.

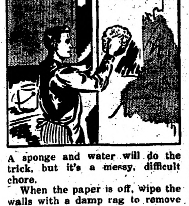
VERY often the question comes up as to how to remove wallpaper from insulating board walls —that is, paper that has been applied directly to a wallboard of one kind of material or another and not to plaster.

It's not too easy a job, but there is a special product on the market, designed especially for a task like this, that you probably can get at your hardware store.



A sponge and water will do the trick, but it's a messy, difficult chore.

When the paper is off, wipe the walls with a damp rag to remove all remains of wallpaper paste. Allow to dry thoroughly, then apply a coat of shellac. Rub down with fine sandpaper and put on a second thin coat of shellac. You now should have a good base which you can paint with any good grade of wall paint or semi gloss enamel.

HOW MINNESOTANS EARN THEIR MONEY

Minneapolis—Individual income in Minnesota was $1,443,000,000, in 1948 the total was $3,970,000,000. The per capita in '29 was only $566, last year more than double that figure, $1,353. Montana, North and South Dakota all topped this state in per capita income in 1947 and '48, Minnesota was tops in '33, second in '29. Of the state's income the Federal Department of Commerce says that 23.6% comes from agriculture, 12.5% from government payments, 14.3% from manufacturing payrolls, 25.3% from trade and service, 24.3% from all other sources.

Cub Scouting for younger boys was organized by the Boy Scouts of America in 1930. Since then more than 2,500,000 boys have been enrolled.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, DISTRICT COURT,
COUNTY OF MARSHALL—SS. FOURTEENTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, to all persons, companies or corporations who have or claim any estate, right, title, or interest in, claim to, or lien upon, any of the several parcels of land described in the list hereto attached.

The list of taxes and penalties on real property for the County of Marshall remaining delinquent on the first Monday in January, 1950, has been filed in the office of the Clerk of District Court of said County, of which that hereto attached is a copy.

THEREFORE YOU, each of you, are hereby required to file in the office of said Clerk, on or before the twentieth day after publication of this notice and list, your answer in writing, setting forth any objection or defense you may have to the taxes, or any part thereof, upon any parcel of land described in said list, in, to or on which you may have or claim any estate, right, title, interest, claim or lien, and, in default thereof, judgment will be entered against such parcel of land for the taxes on said list appearing against it, and for all penalties, interest, and costs.

Dated this 3rd day of February, 1950.

(DISTRICT COURT SEAL)
(MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA)

EDWIN K. ROKKE,
Clerk of District Court of Marshall County, Minnesota.

Official Proceedings of the County Board, Marshall County, Minnesota

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman at 10 o'clock A. M. on Tuesday, February 7th, 1950, and the following members were present: Commissioners Rapacz, Hoff, Bjertness and Edman, and absent: Grange.

Pursuant to notice hearing was held in the matter of petition of George Gusa for setting off Lot 4 of Section 3 and Lot 1 of Section 4 in Township One Hundred fifty-six, Range Forty-three, from School District 126 to School District 61.

After due consideration motion was made by Commissioner Bjertness to grant the petition, which motion was seconded by Commissioner Edman, and was thereupon duly carried, and said lands ordered to be set-off.

Commissioner John A. S. Hoff offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

WHEREAS, A part of Common School District No. 45 has been attached to the Karlstad Consolidated School District under the provisions of Chapter 421, Laws of 1947 as amended by Chapter 666 Laws of 1949, leaving said School District No. 45 with only three sections, to-wit: All of Sections 1, 12 and 13 in Township 158, Range 46, not containing a school house used as such.

NOW THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, That the Board of County Commissioners of said County consider joining all of the above described area to Karlstad Consolidated School District, pursuant to Chapter 666, Section 14, Laws of 1949.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That a hearing be held at the County Commissioners room at the Courthouse in the City of Warren, Marshall County, Minnesota, on the 7th day of March, 1950 at 10 o'clock a. m., and notice thereof be given as required by law.

Commissioner Roy Edman seconded the motion and the same being put to a vote was duly carried.

Commissioner Sofus H. Bjertness offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

WHEREAS, The Peoples State Bank of Warren, Minnesota, a duly designated Depository for county funds, have requested release of $20,000.00 of collateral securities and substitute a like amount as follows, to-wit: $20,000.00 U. S. Treasury Notes, 1 ⅞% Series A-1954, due 3-15-54, No. 6171-2 @ 10 M each, with 9-15-50 and s. c. a.

BE IT RESOLVED, That said securities are hereby approved as securities for deposits of county funds.

Commissioner John A. S. Hoff seconded the motion and the same being put to a vote was duly carried.

Commissioner Roy Edman offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

WHEREAS, A request has been made by the State Department of Agriculture that a County Weed and Seed Inspector be employed in Marshall County for the purpose of inspecting seed grain, feeds, fertilizers, and for the purpose of spraying noxious weeds, and for any other work that comes under his jurisdiction.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, That Archie Eisenrich, Donaldson, Minnesota be hired as part time County Weed and Seed Inspector for Marshall County for a period of eight months beginning March 1 and ending October 31, 1950. The time and rate of pay to be agreed upon by the Marshall County Board and Mr. Eisenrich.

Commissioner John A. S. Hoff seconded the motion and the same being put to a vote was duly carried.

Commissioner Sofus H. Bjertness offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Whereas the maintenance costs on State Aid Parkway No. 1, Marshall County, for the year 1949 amounted to $1,494.15, averaging $249.03 per mile, and that the average county-wide maintenance on State Aid Roads amounted to $231.13 per mile,

Now, therefore, be it resolved that the Marshall County Board of Commissioners request on allotment of $1,500.00 for maintenance of State Aid Parkway No. 1 Marshall County, for the year 1950.

Commissioner John A. S. Hoff seconded the motion and the same being put. was duly carried.

SUPPLEMENT TO HOLT WEEKLY NEWS
HOLT, MINN.

Your Commentator

By Jim Larkin

I suppose you still incline
To date things "1949".

Perhaps the scientist who recently advanced the theory that the earth began as a whirling cloud of dust and gas, is confusing his hypothesis with childhood memories of early highways and Model T Fords.

KEN KEENE
THE CORNER DRUGGIST

Ken tossed this one at me: "If I were to make you a present of a box of cigars, and then tell you that, for my generosity, you must pay me the usual price, plus an additional charge 'for postage and packing', you would tell me where I could go, but quick": I agreed.

"Well," continued Ken, "that proves that you have better sense than those people who are eager for the supposed gifts of socialization plans and subsidies. They do not spot the gimmick—that the money to pay for these seemingly free benefits comes right out of their own pockets at tax paying time. An they pay more than they should for anything they get. It's awful to be dumb—and it's expensive, too".

DEFINITIONS IN RHYME

IMPEDIMENTA—obstructions to progress, things which hold you back.
Let's hope you don't meet any on Nineteen-Fifty's track.

IMPINGE (Pronounced like hinge)—to strike as in collision.
To dodge this when you drive should be your stern decision.

A "January thaw" can have treacherous results. When wet roads again freeze, traction hazards are greater. On winter roads never take good traction for granted; it might not be there.

A new little sound amplifying device can make even distant whispers audible. But it still does not equal the power of the telepathic wife. You know—the one who, in debate with the mate, "hears" his unspoken defense and snaps: "I know what you're going to say, and you can just keep still".

Here's a little trick to try on your learned friends. Ask them to define the word "Time" without using the word in the definition. When they have struggled with it for a while, you can give them the definition: "The period during which an action, process or condition continues."

Winter is indoors-time and certain dangers result from the fact. If you have an auxiliary oil heater, be sure that it contains the proper fuel and that room ventilation allows admission of fresh air so that you can continue to breathe—and live.

YOU HAVE YOUR SAY

From Miss Barbara Gresbach, student at the University of Wisconsin, comes the following:

I find that any heavy date
That keeps me from the "Dorm" 'til late,
Is fun—but it is not the way
To keep my grades at a straight A.

A reader suggests that I run "some sort of a contest". Sorry, friend, but I haven't the means to compete with radio and other contests where everything short of "the world with a fence around it" is the prize. In fact, I couldn't even buy the fence.

The U. S. Budget gives the impression that the U. S. Forestry Service costs $26,000,000 a year. Actually it costs $43,000,000. Discrepancies like this, as revealed by the bipartisan Hoover Commission, indicate that if its recommendations are adopted, from $3 to $5 billions a year can be saved, according to the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report.

EINSTEIN HONORED ON 70TH BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY . . . Internationally-renowned scientist Albert Einstein, right, is shown as he received an honorary doctor of philosophy degree from Dr. Israel S. Wechsler in behalf of the Hebrew university of Jerusalem. Presentation was made at Einstein's home in Princeton, N. J. Dr. Wechsler is president of the American friends of the Hebrew university.

Obituary of Mrs. Lunke

Funeral services were conducted Saturday afternoon from the Nazareth Lutheran church for Mrs. Elise Lunke, pioneer of this community, who passed away at her home Feb. 22, 1950, at the age of 81 years, 7 months, and 20 days. She was laid to rest in the Holt cemetery, Rev. V. G. Sorenson officiating.

Elise Lunke was born July 2nd 1868 in Gulbransdalen, Norway, of parents Jacob and Kari Melum She was baptised and confirmed in Tretten church by Rev. Stub and in 1894 she emigrated to America and came to Rutland, N. D.

On Dec. 17th, 1896, she was united in marriage to Mathias Lunke by Rev. J. A. Jacobson at Crookston. They came to East Valley Township where she resided until the time of her death.

She leaves to mourn her passing one son Carl, at home; three daughters, Ida, Mrs. Wm. Stienhauer; Emma, Mrs. Loyd Haagenson of the Holt community; Julia, Mrs. Simon B. Moe of Duluth, eight grandchildren and two greatgrandchildren; several neices and nephews, one sister and two brothers in Norway.

She was a charter member of the Nazareth Lutheran church and a faithful worker in the Ladies Aid

She was preceeded in death by her husband, her parents, two sisters, and three brothers.

Federal Crop Insurance

Mr. Strandquist, Chairman of Marshall County PMA Committee, points out that any person with an interest in a wheat or flax crop in Marshall County at planting time may apply for this protection. Producers who apply now will have their applications accepted and their Federal Crop Insurance policy issued to them before they invest the money and labor which the policy protects unless of course, they should be among the few that will be rejected in the interest of keeping the local county program as sound as possible,

Applications are being taken at PMA office in Warren and by Chester Larson for Holt, East Valley, Excel and Agdar townships.

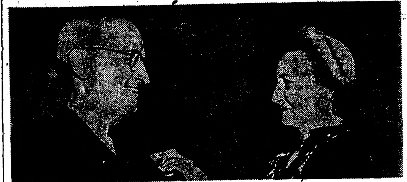
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Einstein Calls Arms Race Suicide; Truman Asks GI School Abuse End; Bigger Cities Launch War on Crime

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



TRUMAN BUYS FIRST POPPY . . . Mrs. Marie L. Sheehe, Rockville, Ill., national president of the American Legion Auxiliary, pins the first 1950 poppy on President Truman's lapel at a White House ceremony. The Legion poppy sale, proceeds of which go to disabled veterans, begins May 27.

ARMS RACE:
Suicide Road

A solemn warning that an arms race between the United States and Russia beckons annihilation was issued by Dr. Albert Einstein.

Appearing on a television show, Einstein, hailed as the world's greatest mathematician and one of the great physicists of the world, declared the arms contest now underway is assuming "hysterical" proportions on both sides.

ONE of the chief contributors to the final development of the atomic bomb, Einstein declared that "the means to mass destruction are perfected with feverish haste behind the respective walls of secrecy. The H-bomb appears on the public horizon as a probably attainable goal and its accelerated development has been solemnly proclaimed by the President."

Then he uttered the punch line: "Armed security is an illusion if successful, radioactive poisoning of the atmosphere and hence annihilation of any life on earth has been brought within the range of technical possibilities."

To implement that conclusion, he said: "The ghostlike character of this development lies in its apparently compulsory trend. Every step appears as the unavoidable consequence of the preceding one. In the end, there beckons more and more and more general annihilation."

FEW MEN could speak with more compelling authority on that subject than the white-haired, brilliant-eyed, venerable scientist who has contributed so much to the sum of man's knowledge.

But each time civilization has been wont to attempt annihilation through war, there has been little disposition to listen to those voices who would cry out a warning.

GI SCHOOLS:
Abuse End Asked

The fantastic, preposterous elements in the GI school program had just about run their course. Ballroom dancing, bartending, even a lot of individual flight training by ex-GI's who would never own an airplane or have occasion to need one, were on the way out, apparently, as part of the accepted GI school training program.

NO LESS A FIGURE than President Truman himself handed congress a catalog of abuses under this year's 2.75-billion-dollar GI education program and urged the legislators to clamp down.

Mr. Truman asked specifically for legislation to prevent "inferior" training of that type which is likely to do the veteran little appreciable good.

His report showed that 761 million dollars already has been added to the estimated cost of the GI schooling program for the current fiscal year ending June 30, and attributed this to increased enrollment for trade, vocational and other schools below college level.

THE PRESIDENT declined to say just how much might be saved by a careful scrutiny of the program, but hinted at a billion dollars.

Among others, the report made these points:

1. Enough poor-quality training is in evidence "to warrant serious concern."

2. The states—which under the law have the say-so about approving schools and courses—lack uniform standards.

3. Some states approve schools of a type which would not be approved in other states.

As an example, it is said that some states qualify barbers in 11 weeks, others require two years.

Crime
A CHECK-UP

With 14 metropolitan newspapers taking a careful scrutiny of its operations, and the federal government opening a conference on what to do about it, U.S. crime appeared to have fallen on evil days.

Not for decades had the boys who deal in shady enterprises had so much publicity focused upon them. Names were being called, police officials were getting the lifted-eyebrow treatment, wire services were ripping telephones out of bookie joints and, all [illegible] all, it appeared to be a real b[illegible] nto which the craft of crime w[illegible] allowing.

THE PRESS would be the real instrument of exposure, granted that officialdom in cities included really wanted to clean up the undesirable conditions. For example; New York city's fabulous Frank Costello, often called the king of the rackets, was the first target of the newspaper series. Costello was referred to as a "fellow so unbelievable he might have been dreamed up by a Hollywood script writer." The story attempted to link him with top-flight gambling activities over most of the U.S.

One significant line in the first of the newspapers' series was this: "Gambling can't operate for any period unless the police let it operate. Nor can the other rackets."

THAT was so obviously axiomatic that there could be no argument with it, and honest cops over the nation had to take the rap with the hand-held-out boys when blame was being shuffled around for lax law enforcement.

The slot machine—termed variously the "one-armed bandit" and other unprintable names—was the target for a special government inquiry. It was indicated that their menace is so fully realized that the federal government may step in to help the state control them.

There is an ironical contradiction here, however, because the federal government licenses slot machines and accepts revenue from that source. If the federal government should outlaw them, it would go a long way toward insuring efficient state control.

INDONESIA:
Uncle Comes Through

The United States, continuing its efforts to stop communism by strengthening local nationalist regimes over the globe, approved a loan of 100 million dollars to the new republic of Indonesia.

THE MONEY, according to reports, was to be used by Indonesia to finance purchase in this country of industrial material and equipment for reconstruction of the Indonesian economy.

It was reported that funds from the import-export bank, which made the loan, might be flowing to Indonesia in a matter of weeks for purchase of railroad cars, trucks and similar equipment, but that a longer time would be required for such items as heavy machinery.

THE INDONESIANS, numbering 75 million people, are faced with a major task of restoring production to an economy not yet recovered from the effects of wartime Japanese occupation.

The funds from the United States would go principally to repair of war-damaged port, railway, highway and processing facilities and replacement of damaged transportation facilities.

The loan was the largest since the import-export bank agreed to lend Israel 100 million dollars several months ago.

BUILDERS' DREAM

Mud Can Be Made Stronger Than Concrete

Certain chemicals plus a sloppy mud patch which, in 24 hours, produces a firm soil pack that may be a road stronger than concrete should prove to be a contractor's dream.

The new technique was reported by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. It was reported the process is especially needed to "give a tough surface for landing operations, newly built airfields and roads for military purposes." The technique was called an "entirely new approach."

The process, it was said, can be used on soils containing up to 30 per cent water by weight, or enough water to turn clay as soft as bread dough. Five hours after treatment, the soil is elastic and has vast tensile strengths.

Smile Awhile

Matter of Garb

Mr. Jones had the usual man-lost-in-department-store look about him. The floorwalker noticed him wandering aimlessly about, and noticing his rather shabby suit, inquired politely:

"Are you looking for something in men's clothing, sir?"

"No!" snapped Mr. Jones curtly, "I'm looking for something in women's clothing—my wife."

Time for Caution

Mr. Smith was always preoccupied when he washed the dishes and kept only one ear open for anything his wife might have to say. She gazed fondly at their small son sleeping in his crib and said:

"He's more like you every day, dear."

"Eh?" muttered Mr. Smith, wiping the suds off a platter. "What's he been up to now?"

No Hurry, Doc

Mr. Jones (on phone)—"Hello? Dr. Smith?"

Doctor—"Yes."

Mr. Jones—"My wife has just dislocated her jaw. If you should be in the neighborhood in the next couple of weeks or so maybe you'd drop in and have a look at her."

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR
by HOMER CROY

Driving along the country road amid the scenes of his youth, Homer Croy—older, wiser now—recalled the people he knew, the friends he had had as a boy in northwest Missouri. He remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He remembers the Delinskys, the "foreigners" on the scrubby farm behind the poor farm; shiftless Tom Davey and his long-suffering family, befriended by the Kennedys before the Daveys headed west again; Lester Forkade, the "city boy" betrothed to Ida; Lester's haughty parents from St. Joe. He recalls the Forkades' first call.

CHAPTER VII

"We've had some of the la grippe through here," said Newt. There was a painful silence during which everybody tried to think of something to say, but couldn't quite make it. Finally Newt said: "Our people seem to be coughing more than usual."

Lucy, the imaginative one, coughed just from thinking about it. One or two moved their feet; Mrs. Kennedy looked out the window to see if anybody was passing. But nobody was.

Ida and Lester sat primly against the wall, not talking at all, both very self-conscious. Ida suggested they go out to the barrel-stave hammock. There was a rope tide to a stake; Lester took hold the rope and pulled at the right place. The hammock swung back and forth, giving off a pleasant, dreamy creaking.

"How long have you lived here?" asked Mrs. Forkade.

"Always," said Newt. "I was born in what is now our smokehouse."

"Oh," said Mrs. Forkade. She turned to Mrs. Kennedy. "And you?"

"I was born in town."

"Oh!"

The clock on the shelf began to tick very loud; the dog came up to the porch, his nails scratching on the floor. "Hello, Kaiser," said Newt and snapped his fingers.

The dog made a little eager noise. "He's a good cattle dog. Do you folks have a dog?"

It turned out they had a pedigreed dog.

Newt had never seen a pedigreed dog in his life, but he didn't want to give himself away. "A person grows fond of any kind of dog, I guess."

"We have two ribbons," said Mr. Forkade.

Newt blinked a little, "That's nice. That's sure nice," he added. "They must give you a lot of satisfaction."

The clock got louder.

"I'll ask you to excuse me," said Mrs. Kennedy politely. "Lucy."

They began to rattle around in the kitchen.

Newt was alone and it was his job to entertain the company. Must make a good impression for Ida's sake. There'd been quite a bit of rain lately, he said; too much for the good of the crops; especially the millet, millet couldn't stand rain. Also there was blackleg around. Suddenly he gave a self-conscious laugh. "Oh course that ain't one of your problems in the city."

"I'm sure it's interesting to hear about it," said Mr. Forkade.

"Yes, indeed," chirped Mrs. Forkade.

Mrs. Forkade glanced around the room, trying to find something to hit on. Her eyes fastened on Harlan. "I believe I've forgotten your name," she said ingratiatingly.

"Harlan," he muttered.

"What do you do, Harlan?" she asked in the superior way grown people sometimes speak to children.

He kicked his heels back and forth. "Nothin'."

"Why," said Newt, instantly defensive, "He's a good worker! I couldn't run the farm without him." This was an exaggeration, but nice to hear.

Mrs. Kennedy took off her apron and came to the door. "Won't you folks come out to dinner?" she asked politely.

"It's just plain, simple cooking," said Newt humbly. "You'll find we don't set much in the way of style."

But there wasn't any humbleness in old Grandpa. "We set the best table anywhere round."

Mrs. Forkade smiled at the quaint old gentleman. "I'm sure you do."

Ida and Lester came in and seated themselves side by side, like a married couple.

"Pa," said Newt.

Grandpa bent his old gray head over his plate and thanked the Lord for what had been set before us. Then we all raised our heads up, ready to eat.

Mrs. Forkade Admires An 'Antique' Dish

The chairs creaked, the knives and forks clinked. Mrs. Kennedy picked up the peacock fan and swished it over the table.

Mrs. Forkade continued to chatter. Country cooking! There was nothing like country cooking, she said.

Her eyes fastened on the peacock fan. It was about three feet long and had a white braided leather handle and a little loop at the end to hang up the fan so the feathers wouldn't get crushed out of shape. "Where did you buy it?"

"I made it," said Mrs. Kennedy.

Mrs. Forkade glanced at her with respect. It wasn't everybody who could make a peacock fan and match the eyes properly.

As Mrs. Forkade ate, her eyes moved up and down the table. One of the dishes was a glass one which was shaped like two hands being held together. It was for piccalilli.

Mrs. Forkade picked it up. "Charles, look at this cha'ming antique.

Mrs. Kennedy gave a start; and, for that matter, so did Newt. "We didn't know it was an antique," said Newt. "We use it for everyday wear."

First we ate the filling food, then the fancy vittles. Afterwhile the two kinds of cake and the two kinds of pie; they were good. People were slowing up now.

At last we got up. Then kind of wobbled into the parlor and dropped down on chairs.

Ida and Lester went back to the hammock, soon it was dreamily creaking again.

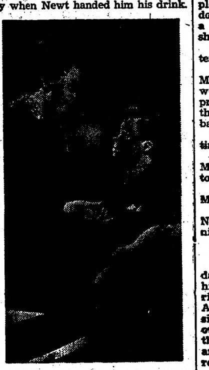
Newt Talks Frankly, Too

Always, after Sunday dinner, Newt went into their bedroom and took a nap. But he couldn't before fashionable city company. He tried to talk, but in spite of himself his eyes kept slipping down. "Will anybody have a drink?"

Mr. Forkade looked up with interest. "Thank you, I will," he said promptly.

Newt went out and pumped up a drink and brought back the blue glass pitcher filled with water; the blue glass pitcher had bumps on it.

"Thanks," said Mr. Forkade shortly when Newt handed him his drink.



"What do you do, Harlan?" she asked in the superior way grown people sometimes speak to children.

"Do you like living in the country, Mr. Kennedy?" asked Mr. Forkade.

Never before in all his life had anyone ever asked Newt such a question.

"I suppose I do. I just never gave any thought to the matter."

"I'm glad I don't live on a farm," said Mr. Forkade, unexpectedly. "You'll excuse me for being frank, won't you Mr. Kennedy?"

Newt looked at him in amazement. For it didn't seem possible to him that a person wouldn't want to live on a nice well-improved farm. "I suppose people have to differ in their tastes."

"Such crude surroundings," continued Mr. Forkade. "You see, I am being quite outspoken. But I like for people to be frank."

Newt blinked in utter bewilderment. "We think we've got things fixed up pretty well." His eyes went out to where Ida and Lester were knocking the croquet balls around; then came back to the cold, formidable city people. Something was going on in his mind. Some people have the ability to see through things quickly and to size them up rightly. But Newt couldn't; as he himself would have said, "He was a slow worker." But he worked to pretty true conclusions. He seemed to be trying to find a topic of conversation. Finally he said, "There's been a good deal of flux around." Flux was a forbidden word.

Mrs. Kennedy glanced at him, horrified; but it didn't stop him. Yes, there'd been, he continued, shaking his head sadly.

Mrs. Kennedy tried to change the subject; and she did, but he shot off on another one which was just as bad.

"I've just bought a new Poland China boar. Would you want to see him? He's out in the pen." Mrs. Kennedy glanced at him, horrified; but he did not stop. "I've got some fine brood sows, too. Would you want to see them?"

"I don't believe so," said Mrs. Forkade coldly.

"Well, you'd be seeing some fine breeding stock."

"I think I'd drop the subject," said Mrs. Kennedy.

He glanced at her in what seemed to be shocked surprise. "Good land, honey, what's wrong talkin' about that? A preacher could speak out in his pulpit anything I've said and not bring censure on him."

At last, Mrs. Kennedy got him stopped; but he sat looking at the floor, hurt. "Good land, Minnie, that's part of life. An' Mr. Forkade said he liked people to be frank and outspoken, didn't you, Mr. Forkade?"

"Well . . . yes."

The bashfulness that had gripped Newt so long seemed to have departed, for he wanted to do all the talking. He talked about how many gilts were going to pig and about the calf Dixie had dropped. It was the way farmers talked among themselves—not the kind of talk city people ever heard. He turned to the big harvester calendar. He had made a circle around one of the dates. "I guess that'll interest you, Mrs. Forkade."

Mrs. Forkade looked politely.

"That's when one of our cows is going to freshen."

Mrs. Kennedy's face was suffused with shame. She tried to turn the conversation, but nothing—nothing in the world—seemed to stop Newt.

"I suppose that seems kind of shocking to city folks, but I don't see it that way; it seems kind of beautiful to me, bringin' nice calves and foals into the world." Newt meant that, too.

Mrs. Forkade glanced at Mr. Forkade and lifted her brows. He pulled out his watch. "I expect we'd better think about going back, dear."

Newt sprang up excitedly. "You haven't seen my farm yet! Come on and walk across. You'll see some mighty nice layin' land."

They didn't want to, but Newt insisted and got them started. At last they came back, weak in the knees, not being used to walking on plowed ground. Mr. Forkade sat down on the edge of the porch like a farmer and looked at his soiled shoes.

"It was most interesting. Most interesting," he said weakly.

At last, the afternoon was over; Mr. and Mrs. Forkade and Lester went out to the livery rig and got in promptly. But Newt wouldn't let them go. When could they come back?

"You must come and see us sometime," said Mrs. Forkade, faintly.

Newt leaped at it. "We sure will, Mrs. Forkade. That'll be a real treat to us, won't it, Minnie?"

Mrs. Kennedy said it was nice for Mrs. Forkade to think of it.

"We're sure goin' to accept," said Newt. "Maybe we can stay overnight."

"You must," said Mrs. Forkade.

The livery rig rolled away.

Ida did not see Lester for several days; then he came snorting up in his automobile, but the novelty of riding in a car was wearing off. And Lester—the dandy, the exquisite—did not seem quite so glamorous. The family sat on the porch, as they had so many other evenings, and watched Lester chug down the road with Ida beside him.

The family gathered around the coaloil lamp with the dog's head on the shade. Reading time, now. Newt got his livestock paper and settled in his rocking chair, his big brown hands gripping the paper.

There was a clattering and chugging. The noise came closer, then stopped. Who could that be? Too early for Ida. But it wasn't, for in a few moments there was the sound of her steps on the porch and the sound of Lester rattling down the road in his car, alone. For a moment it seemed that she had been crying. But she hadn't, instead her eyes were flashing. She extended her hand, but this time there was no ring on her finger. She turned to her father. "Do you know what he said?"

"I wouldn't rightly know, Ida."

"He said his parents said you were crude and that we were not the same kind of people and that only the same kind of people should get married."

"Crude!" exclaimed Newt. "They did? They said that about me? Now how did they get that idea?"

This was the end of Ida's affair with the city boy who was too good for her. But she had plenty of beaus.

Grandpa Prefers The Old Ways

As I read back through what I've written I find I have got in hardly anything at all about Grandpa. Yet what a vivid character he was. Nearly every family had a grandfather or grandmother living with them; for the most part they had learned to keep quiet, for sometimes the children didn't want them. But Newt and Mrs. Kennedy wanted old Grandpa and he wasn't "held down." It's hard to think of Grandpa Kennedy being "held down" by anyone, such a determined individualist was he.

Most grandparents didn't think their children were farming right; old ways were best. Grandpa Kennedy though old ways were best too, but also he thought Newt was a good farmer. Indeed, took pride in him. "If you want to know what to plant, or when to sell, you just watch what Newton does," he would say to neighbors.

Old neighbors, old ways, old days—that was what interested him. News about the "old pioneers," as he called them. When Newt came back from town he would go to him and say, "Pa, I've got some bad news to tell you. Old Mrs. Bentley passed away."

Grandpa would remain silent a moment. Then say, "She crossed two years after me." Another silence "Did you get perticklers?"

Spectator cheering at football games is an 80-year-old American practice. On November 13, 1869, when Rutgers and Princeton universities met for the second intercollegiate grid contest in U. S. history, Princeton supporters invoked lungpower, shouting an old Confederate battle cry to urge their team on to victory. P. S. Princeton won, 8-0.

Means of Measure

The history of time-measuring devices goes back to the cave dwellers. Early man braided a rope of grass and tied knots at regular intervals. The rope was dampened and set on fire, and the smouldering embers, creeping from knot to knot, recorded the passage of time. Since primitive man had no language, one wit assumes that the cave-wife, when her husband left for the hunt, would point to the knot at which "time" her spouse would be expected home!

LOOKING AHEAD

BY GEORGE S. BENSON

President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

For All the People

America, we sometimes say, is made up of Fords and Frigidaires, Kodaks and Coca-Cola. We like brands and trade-marks. We respect the successful products of industry, and have confidence in them. We're even likely to take these things for granted, without knowing the how or why behind them. America is the only land where initiative, enterprise, and competition have been allowed to work for the good of all the people.

Yet, to view our industry as comprising a few great names and trade-marks only, is to have a confused and off-balance picture. To think that manufacturers of goods we all like to buy—automobiles, for instance — are the "great monopoly" is to fail to see how big and how productive the nation really is. Neither General Motors, nor any of the others, could get by without their hundreds of helper factories that make everything from cotter-pins to hub-caps.

Where the Supplies

These helper factories are in turn supplied with parts and materials by hundreds of other firms. A supply line may even go back to a simple "alley shop," where three or four men grind or polish a part. Or take a town like Worcester, Mass. The total wage bill there for workers in plants supplying the automotive industry was almost $40,000,000 in 1946. That's a good sized payroll.

Or take the whole parts industry, of which there are more than 1,000 companies, with plants spread all over America. Most of these parts producers are small businesses, employing less than 500 workers each. Usually their origin may be traced to fertile minds that invented and patented an idea for improving automobiles. Many newcomers are still getting into the parts and equipment field. Under the American system, this is possible.

Each Has a Part

Mistaken in their complaint about monopolies, in the next breath some folks berate the "machine age" for not offering the worker a chance to take pride in his work. Just putting in cotter-pins all day in the same old assembly-line position, they say, is poor substitute for craftsmanship. Right here, I want to go on record as praising the free and responsible American who put the cotter-pins firmly and safely in the chassis of my automobile! He did a good job.

I'll give the average American worker the praise that is his due. He has the intelligence to see his place in our method of mass production of goods for the use of everybody. Not so long ago, war workers were being told they were "right behind the man behind the gun." Indeed, the lowliest assembly-line worker or file-clerk is a part of peace-time production. And it is this production that makes America the best land in the world in which to live.

Yes, hundreds and sometimes thousands of suppliers and fabricators are the craftsmen behind the automobiles we drive, the radios we hear. As workers in a free America, we can never overlook the importance of the place we have behind the name tags on the products of our skill. As we work, and to the extent that we understand and depend upon that system, so shall we succeed in preserving American ways and liberties.

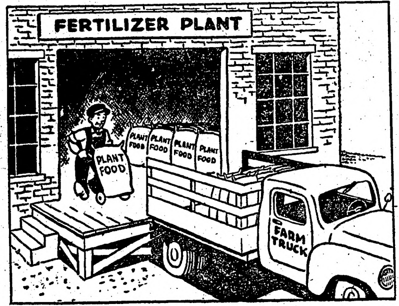
Bigger 1950 Fertilizer Demand Spurs Need For Prompt Action in Obtaining Supplies



Buying fertilizer early saves time and insures getting just what you want.

PROSPECTS of a "sizable increase" in the 1950 demand for fertilizer make it advisable for farmers to act promptly in ordering plant food now and taking delivery as soon as it can be arranged, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

More farmers may want more fertilizer than ever before next spring. The demand can be met only if fertilizer manufacturers can keep a steady flow of plant food moving out of their factories this winter. To accomplish this, the cooperation of farmers is essential in ordering early and taking delivery as soon as available.

Unless finished fertilizer continues to move to dealers and farmers, factory storage space will become overloaded and production schedules will have to be cut down. Already some factories report they are running out of storage space. If this trend continues the plant food production may not be sufficient to meet demands next spring.

In prewar days, says the statement, many farmers could wait until the last minute to get their plant food. With the greater demand, the manufacturing, curing and delivery of fertilizer can no longer be crowded into a seasonal rush period. Production operations, shipping and delivery now must be planned on a year-round basis.

The cooperation of farmers in ordering early made possible the big increase in the production and use of fertilizer in recent years. The continuance of that "order early" cooperation is essential today for every farmer to have the plant food he wants when he wants it next spring. This will save costly delays when every hour counts.

Save the Fish Oil

Don't throw away the oil that comes on canned fish, such as tuna, salmon and sardines. Use it in cream sauce to serve with the fish, in cooked salad dressings for fish, or to moisten the fish with it for sandwich fillings.

When Buying Nylon

Sheerness in silk and nylon is indicated by the word "denier". A 15-denier nylon is especially thin, best for dress up and evening wear. A 30-denier nylon is better suited to everyday wear.

How much longer? A few weeks, according to the ground-hog, and then winter is scheduled to bless us by leaving. Hope it works out that way. This winter has been a tough one on many of us. And just in case we get another rough spell or two, let me pass on an idea which a lot of friends have come up with this year. Seems that whenever it starts storming at night, and travel looks hazardous, they turn on the yard light. It acts as a sort of signal light, in case anyone becomes stalled by the storm. It harkens back to the early day custom of putting a kerosene lamp in the window in the days before electricity. Only now, with a more powerful electric light shining brightly in the yard, it's even more of a friendly sign of welcome to the snowbound traveler.

By the way, I'm taking a modest little bow this month. Some one pointed out the other day that without me, there would be few electrified farms in the United States. It was the private initiative of America's business-owned and operated electric light and power companies—and their technical achievements in the field of electricity—that fathered the immense programs of rural electrification. As a matter of fact, the first experimental rural electric line in the world was built in 1923 near Red Wing, Minnesota, with funds provided by the Otter Tail Power Company, Northern States Power Company and Minnesota Power and Light Company.

EXPANSION PROGRAM

Yes, tax-paying, self-supporting light companies started the project over a quarter of a century ago, and they've been at it ever since, improving ways and means of overcoming obstacles and bringing electricity to farms at lowest possible rates. There's still much to be accomplished, and you'll find companies like the Otter Tail Power Company, throughout the United States, doing their part.

Gilbert O. Nordrum Called

Funeral services were conducted Thursday afternoon from the Nazareth Lutheran Church for Gilbert O. Nordrum, Rev. V. G. Sorenson officiating.

Gilbert O. Nordrum was born in Norway, April 2, 1876 and passed away at St. Lukes hospital on March, 5, 1950, at the age of 78 years, 11 months and 3 days.

At the age of three, his parents migrated to America and settled near Pelican Rapids, Minnesota. A few years later, his family moved to a homestead south of Newfolden. On January 17, 1892, he was confirmed by one of the early pioneer pastors, the Rev. Gulseth.

On May 18, 1905, he was united in marriage with Mattie Kjos of Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

He was sincere in his faith, fearless in his convictions, ever ready to lend a hand, honest in business and genuinely respected for his integrity by those who knew him.

He is survived by his wife Mattie Nordrum of Holt; a son Garfield of Bismarck, North Dakota and two grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Davidsen left last week for a trip to the west coast.

Mr. and Mrs. Loyd M. Larson and Mr. and Mrs. Tony Peterson were supper guests at the Art Lunke home Saturday evening.

Sheep Scarce so Save Lambs

An extra job of caring for bred ewes and newborn lambs the next few weeks will pay dividends for Marshall county farmers this year, according to W. E. Morris, University Farm extension animal husbandman.

Morris says sheep offer one of the best opportunities of all livestock. Wool production is seriously low and mutton supplies are short.

Demand for both is good and is expected to stay high which means local producers should make every effort to save all lambs possible this spring, County Agent Forbes feels.

The key to producing good lively lambs, and to keep them healthy is good management of ewes and lambs:

1. Increase the grain rations of ewes. They should eat 1½ to 2 pounds of grain a day during the last month before lambing. It will help them produce stronger lambs and more milk.

2. Guard against chilling of newborn lambs. Dry them off with a burlap sack. Fix a lamb brooder in the lambing pens, patterned after a pig brooder. Close off a section of the room with canvas. Heat the room if necessary.

3. Severe the lambs naval cord and dip the stub into tincture of iodine to prevent possible infection.

4. Use a creep feeder for lambs. Feed them grain and good alfalfa as soon as they will eat — when they are about 10 days old.

On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Bertil Ness and Hilmer Lunke called on Mrs. O. J. Lunke.

Mr. and Mrs. Art Lunke visited at the Tony Peterson home Monday evening.

NOTICE

I am now back in the Cattle Shipping again, so if you have any stock to ship before the spring breakup, list them at the Sportsmen's Club, the same as before.

Wanted: a friendly atmosphere for millions of dollars

"The future of the mining industry in Minnesota depends largely on whether or not our low-grade ores can be processed economically," writes W. E. Dahlquist, publisher of the Thief River Falls Times. "Millions of dollars have been invested in various experiments. But it will require investments of millions more in plants if a mining industry is to be maintained in Minnesota. Investments in such amounts are not going to be made in an unfriendly atmosphere."

Dahlquist

EVERYBODY IN MINNESOTA HAS A PERSONAL STAKE in the Iron Range. Unfortunately, few really understand why, as Mr. Dahlquist points out, the future of Minnesota's iron ore production depends upon the investment by the present producers of millions of dollars more. Here are the reasons . . .

Minnesota's high grade iron ores are vanishing fast. But there remain untouched billions of tons of "the iron ore of the future"—a hard virgin rock called taconite. The only hitch is that taconite must be practically manufactured into iron ore.

You can't simply scoop up taconite and ship it off to the steel mills. You've got to drill it, blast it, mine it, crush it fine as flour. Next, you've got to run it under magnets or through a separator to winnow out its small amount of iron ore. Then you've got to build it up again into sizeable chunks before it can be used.

This costly manufacturing process calls for a vast new outlay of money. In fact just one taconite "factory" may cost $75 million.

Will such investments be made? First the producers must be reasonably sure they can manufacture taconite ore as cheaply as high-grade ores can be imported from foreign countries like Labrador and Venezuela. And a crucial part of this cost is taxes.

Last year the iron ore industry paid over $27 million in local and state taxes. It is by far the most heavily taxed major industry in Minnesota. It pays general property taxes on a rate of assessment 25% to 50% higher than that used for other industries. The burden of its occupation and royalty taxes is more than three times that of the corporate income tax paid by other businesses. No other state taxes any natural resource as heavily as Minnesota taxes iron ore.

Do you wonder why any further tax increase might discourage the new investment needed to maintain Minnesota's iron ore industry?

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars necessary to hasten the development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that Coward!

While a farm girl was milking a cow, a bull tore across the meadow toward her. The girl did not stir, but continued milking. Observers, who had run to safety, saw to their amazement that the bull stopped dead within a few yards of the girl, turned round and walked sadly away. "Weren't you afraid?" asked everyone.

"Certainly not," said the girl. "I happened to know this cow is his mother-in-law."

Served Him Right

The stingy farmer was scoring the hired man for carrying a lighted lantern to call on his best girl.

"The idea!" he exclaimed. "When I was courtin', I never carried no lantern; I went in the dark."

"Yes," said the hired man, sadly, "and look what you got."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Miners Cited on Contempt Charge; Compromise Reached on Oleo Bill; U.S.-Bulgarian Relations Severed

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

PIT MEN:
A New Angle

Federal Judge Richmond B. Keech wrote a new angle into the continuing fight between the United Mine Workers and the coal operators. The judge cited the miners themselves for criminal contempt on grounds that the 370,000 UMW members had "willfully and wrongfully" ignored his back-to-work order.

THE NEW ANGLE was that this time the UMW's boss, John L. Lewis was not even mentioned in the citation. Observers pointed out that the citation could lead to heavy fines against the union. On two previous occasions, Lewis was named defendant when strike issues came into federal court.

There was some speculation that ommission of Lewis' name from the contempt citation might mean that the government felt that Lewis had been really sincere when he ordered his miners back to work—but no government official would comment on the subject.

Judge Keech's action came as the east was gripped with bitter cold, with many housewives' coal bins nearly empty.

In the meantime, violence flared in the eastern Kentucky coal field as roving mobs wrecked equipment at several mines and beat up at least 11 miners. Ten men were beaten in Knox county and one was attacked in Harlan county.

SIXTEEN AUTOMOBILES loaded with six men each visited a number of mines, Kentucky state police reported. Twenty-eight bullets were fired into a mine mancar hauling miners up an incline, and two automobiles belonging to miners were overturned.

As for the hope of the contempt citation to end the mine walkout, no one would say how effective it would be. It was recalled that there is no limit on the penalty a federal court may impose for contempt, but the Constitution forbids "unusual and excessive" punishment, and the supreme court in 1947 reduced the UMW's contempt fine from three million dollars to $710,000.

BULGARIA:
U.S. Cuts Off

Uncle Sam finally "got his dander up" and began to get tough with the Communist-dominated Balkan countries. In one of the toughest U.S., foreign policy actions since World War II, this nation broke off diplomatic relations with Bulgaria and ordered home American Minister Donald R. Heath and his entire staff.

At the same time, the state department demanded the recall of Dr. Peter Voutov and his smaller Bulgarian staff in washington.

DEVELOPMENTS in the same vein included a ban on American travel in Hungary and the ordering from Communist China of all American consuls.

The U.S. action was seen as a climax to what the state department called a "long series of intolerances and indignities" against the U.S. legation in Sofia.

In that, the state department was on solid ground because since the legation was established in 1947, Bulgarian officials and the controlled Bulgarian press, the department said, had been "constantly denouncing and insulting the United States." The department charged the Sofia government had carried on an "unprincipled campaign of prosecution" against Bulgarian employees of the legation.

THE DIRECT CAUSE of the break was said to be Bulgaria's demand of January 19 that Heath be recalled for "interference" in Bulgarian internal affairs. Charges of spying also had been made against Americans in the legation.

The break was significant because it indicated a stronger attitude by President Truman and state secretary Acheson toward Moscow satellites with which the U.S. has been waging postwar disputes.

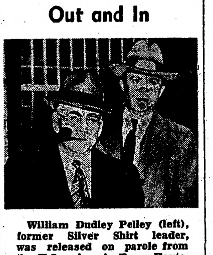
However, there was no cause for alarm as to military repercussions. For, as Winston Churchill put it, diplomatic recognition of one nation by another does not mean espousal of that nation's policies or attitudes—it is an act to secure certain conveniences. Conversely, when diplomatic relations are broken off, it means chiefly that those conveniences are at an end, but not necessarily military action.

MEN'S CLOTHES:
Going Up

Early in 1950, there was much newspaper space devoted to feature articles in which a happy era of low-cost men's clothing was about to descend upon the American male.

Indeed, the old standby—the $35 suit—was pitcured as coming into its own again and a man could cheerfully anticipate clothes buying. But apparently it was all a dream, for clothing costs are up.

Out and In



William Dudley Pelley (left), former Silver Shirt leader, was released on parole from the U.S. prison in Terre Haute, Ind., where he had been serving a 15-year sentence on a crimial sedition charge. But as he left the prison gates he was promptly arrested again, because North Carolina has requested his extradition in order to try him for violation of the state's securities law.

OLEO BILL:
A Compromise

Congress had reached a compromise on what should be done about the bill to repeal federal taxes on oleomargarine. One factor helping the compromise along was the striking out of a senate requirement that colored margarine sold at retail be put up in triangular packages.

But the conference committees which effected the compromise put in strict labeling requirements.

IF THE SENATE, and house accept the compromise, it would become effective July 1. The bill had been in the hands of the conference committees since February 2. The House passed the measure last year, with one senate version being approved in January of this year.

It had been agreed by both houses to knock out federal taxes on oleo, but dairy interests had held out for the triangular-package requirement, arguing that this was necessary to make sure nobody got margarine thinking it was butter.

HERE are the taxes the bill would wipe out:

One-fourth of a cent a pound on uncolored margarine, 10 cents a pound on the colored form; $600 a year on manufacturers whether their output was colored or not; $480 a year on wholesalers of colored margarine, $200 on wholesalers of the uncolored, $48 on retailers of colored margarine, and $6 a year on retailers of the uncolored variety.

Unaffected by the bill are laws in 21 states banning manufacture or sale of colored margarine.

SEARCH:
No Sharp Guide

The inviolability of a man's home against search without due course of law—meaning a properly executed warrant—is now in question as the result of a recent supreme court decision.

The court, in a 5 to 3 ruling, held that when police legally arrest a man, they also may search a limited area under his immediate control for evidence of a crime. But the court didn't say exactly how far the police may go.

Justice Felix Frankfurter protested vigorously. Dissenting from the opinion, he declared that the "decision makes mockery of the fourth amendment to the constitution which bans unreasonable search and seizure.

He added that the court by its action had overturned a long series of decisions and argued that the tribunal should "show respect for continuity in the law."

The majority opinion was written by one of the new justices, Sherman Minton, who said, "What is reasonable search is not to be determined by any fixed formula. The recurring questions of the reasonableness of searches must find resolution in the facts and circumstances of each case."

The decision came in the case of Albert J. Rabinowitz, who was charged with the sale of four altered postage stamps. When he was arrested, officers searched his office and found 573 more stamps. These were made the basis of a new charge that he possessed and concealed altered stamps.

Defense Move

Ever since World War II there has been considerable discussion of a proposal to scatter U.S. agencies and industrial manufacturing centers so that in the event of another war the nation would not face the threat of complete paralysis from bombing attacks.

Now, the proposal had the support of the head of the office of civilian defense, Dr. Paul J. Larsen.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

Driving down a country road amid the scenes of his youth, Homer Croy—older, wiser now—recalled the people he knew, the friends he had had as a boy in northwest Missouri. He remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his childhood playmate. He remembers Ida's citified fiance, Lester Forkade and his haughty parents from St. Joe. He remembers the first time the Forkades came to call on Ida's family; they were so shocked by Newt's frankness—crudeness, they called it—that Lester broke the engagement a few days later. Then he remembered Grandpa Kennedy.

CHAPTER VIII

"She went in her sleep."

Another brooding silence. "That's the way I want to go."

Then, to make conversation, Newt would say, "When was it Press Bentley died?"

Grandpa always knew.

One by one he had given his household things and his farm things to Newt, except one. And that was his feather bed. He had crossed the plains in a feather bed; that bed was gone and others had followed it; but he still had one and for it a deep, an almost personal affection. Really more than that; a kind of childish affection. As a child might have for some precious toy.

When the heat of summer came, he would change to his straw tick. But he never liked it and was glad when the chill of fall came and he could go back to his feather bed. "There's nothing like feathers to make a person sleep."

No one could monkey with the bed except himself. Every so often he aired it by carrying it to the clothesline and throwing it over, where it hung in two great, misshapen, stained bags. When the sun was off it, he would carry it back to the L and ease it onto the springs.

Nothing but pullet feathers would do. When Mrs. Kennedy dressed a pullet, he would take the feathers, dry them in the sun and put them into a bag. Now and then would come feather-changing day. A great, choking cloud of broken feathers would rise. He would put the fresh new feathers into the tick. But he couldn't sew it up himself. Mrs. Kennedy would do that. The next morning he would say, "I just don't know of anything nicer'n a bed of new feathers."

And now I must leave him, for the time being, and go on to other things.

Newt had taken a protective attitude toward Anton Delinsky. Felt sorry for him, he said; a fella ought to help a newcomer who was tryin' to catch on to our ways.

"He's goin' to develop into a good farmer," Newt would say. Some things however, still worried Newt. The Rooshan made the children work in the field; the whole tribe of them worked on Sunday. Worst of all, the Rooshan started a manure pile near the house; the air from it was "goot for the lungs," he said. Newt tried to persuade him out of it, but Anton Delinsky stuck by his old ways; finally, he gave in. This was a triumph for Newt.

But there was one thing Newt couldn't bring himself to approve—Delinsky's immensely big and immensely black beard. He explained to Delinsky why he should not wear it. People in America didn't wear beards—especially such whoppers as Mr. Delinsky was carrying around.

Delinsky Balks At Beard-Cutting

"Whack it off, Anton; that's my advice. That sumac may be all right for Russia, but it won't do for America."

Delinsky was pained. He wanted to do what Newt told him to do. But also he loved his beard. Back in the old country, he said, a beard showed you were a man.

"We all know you're a man," said Newt; "you don't have to wear that haymow outcropping to prove it. Whack it."

Delinsky moved uneasily and stroked his outcropping. "I like him."

Newt explained the whole thing patiently. "Listen, Anton; a beard was all right twenty years ago. There were lots of beards walkin' around, then. But not now. The only beards you see now are on yaps from Platte River."

Delinsky shook his head, tortured between wanting to do what his best friend said and love of his beautiful beard. "I want to keep him."

It was at about this time that Ida got a camera, the first one ever to come on the Kennedy farm; immediately, of course, everybody and everything had to be photographed.

One day, in town, Newt pulled some of the pictures out of his pocket and showed them to Delinsky. Delinsky looked with immense interest at the scenes he knew so well; and at his friends.

Longing came into his face. He would like to have some pictures made of himself to send back to the old country. Could Newt do that for him?

"Sure, Anton!" said Newt, delighted to do something for his neighbor. "Yes, indeed. You come up Sunday morning and I'll get Ida to nail down your beauty."

Newt saw his chance.

Early Sunday morning there came Anton Delinsky swinging down the road in his best Russian suit and wearing his queer Russian cap and strange Russian boots. Usually he cut across pastures, stooping under barbed-wire fences and hopping gullies. But not this morning. This was special.

His beard almost seemed to glisten, so carefully had he brilliantined and combed it.

"Well, Anton, you look just mighty handsome!" said Newt.

"Dink so?" said Delinsky modestly.

"I sure do, Anton!" allowed Newt in great good nature. "If it wasn't for me you'd be the best looking man in Knabb School district."

Delinsky's beard cracked into a smile. "Yah, Delinsky second, dot's all right wit' Delinsky."

Now came the very moment Newt had planned for. But he must approach it just right.

"Look, Anton! I've been thinking about this picture. You want to look just right in it, don't you?"

He nodded his head emphatically. "Yah, yah."

"You want the people back in Russia to see you're turnin' into an American, don't you?" Anton beamed more than ever. "Come out on the back porch. I want to show you something."

Delinsky followed, wonderingly.

In the summertime, Newt shaved on the back porch; he had a mirror on the wall, a strop hung from a hook and on a shelf was a hone. When he finished shaving, he brought hot water from the reservoir, washed, then dried himself on the roller towel. Then he would give the towel a pull so the next person would have a nice fresh place. He had a pair of scissors for cutting hair, with a knob on the thumb side like a barber's.

"We all know you're a man," said Newt; "you don't have to wear that haymow outcropping to prove it. Whack it."

"Look, Anton, see this." He waved his hand over his outfit. "I'll tell you," he went on wheedingly, "what we'll do. I'll cut your beard for you and I'll shave you, too, and have you spruced up as fine as a travelin' man."

Poor Delinsky didn't seem to understand. "Yah, do what?"

Newt explained it all again.

"There's the chair. Sit down and I'll do as good a job as the Monopole." He clicked the scissors enticingly. "Come on." He held up his mustache cup with its little shelf to rest the brush. "I'll start the lather." He rattled the brush in the cup; little tickling, foaming sounds came up. He picked up the apron he used to put over a person's shoulders. "This keeps the hair from gettin' down inside and stickin' you like a new set of wool underclothes." He managed to get the wavering—the tortured man—into the chair, then began to tie the apron strings around Delinsky's neck.

Newt Gives Up in Disgust

He took the mirror and handed it to him. "There you are, Anton Delinsky. Esquire! Take your last look at that brush picture. The next time you see yourself you'll be a full-fledged, seventeen-jeweled American."

Delinsky looked at the brush pasture and seemed to choke.

"I hate to see him go."

"O course you do. But you'll like your American face better."

Delinsky ran his fingers through the silky hairs, looking at them for the last time, longingly and tenderly. "Zo nice."

Click! went the dreadful scissors.

Suddenly Delinsky leaped up, the apron swinging from his shoulders. "No! I want him." He began to back away from Newt as if Newt were some ogre seeking to devour him.

Newt tried to coax him back, but Delinsky began pulling at the strings and finally had the apron off. The two men glared, ready, it seemed, almost to fly at each other. Newt threw down his scissors. "Go on being a damned, stubborn, bullheaded foreigner. You'll never become a real American."

Delinsky was hurt—his best friend was slipping from him.

"Look here, Anton," said Newt less harshly, "you're leanin' on me to learn you the ways of America, then when the pinch comes you won't pay any attention. I don't want to be unreasonable, but I'm not goin' to photograph you with that beard. That's how strongly I feel about it."

But Delinsky felt strongly about it, too. So strongly, in fact, that he started toward the road, his shoulders high and square and filled with emotion.

"I'm through with that foreigner," said Newt.

Every now and then, during the summer, Newt would send word to drop in on a certain evening and he might be induced to open a watermelon.

When the wonderful evening arrived, Ma and Pa and I would walk down the road, me a little ahead.

Neighbors would be coming in their hacks, buggies, or spring wagons; but we would walk because we lived so close. Even before we got there, the party took on an air of excitement. Harlan would come war-whopping down the road, to meet me and the dog would be barking his head off. As we got close to the house, there wouldn't be a Kennedy in sight; all busy.

Pretty soon the porch would be filled, the women sitting on chairs and the men on the edge of the porch with their feet on the ground. Neighborhood news now. Who was sick ... old Mr. Knabb appeared to be worse. Had had another bad night ... voices would grow hushed and there'd be a little wait. Then Newt'd say: "I expect I'd better go an' sit up with him tomorrow night. His family must be pretty worn out." Nobody sat up with as many people as Newt did; nobody could do it better either. Newt was a natural hand with the sick.

Newt had made a table in the yard by driving down stakes and putting boards across them; Mrs. Kennedy and the girls had covered the boards with paper. Up and down the table would be plates and knives and forks and salt-cellars. But of course no chairs; the people would go back to the porch for that. At one end of the table would be the wash boiler.

After everybody had talked ages (or so it seemed), Newt would say, "Lucy, can you oblige?" and Lucy would ... with just everybody about to faint from hunger. Then the people'd clap and Lucy would oblige with "Bingen on the Rhine."

Finally, Newt would say in his joking way, "If nobody has any objections I'll open up a melon." A melon! There'd be a dozen of 'em. But that was his way of saying it. I always knew what was coming next.

"Harlan! Homer!"

Newt Opens a Watermelon

It was work, but I didn't care. Bringing watermelons up for a party was fun. Hoeing them was something else.

We'd light a lantern, take it to the cave and set it on the floor. There'd be the melons all piled in one corner, the crocks on one side, the melons on the other. We'd take a melon, go up with it and put it on the ground near the table. The women never had to do anything. At all other parties they had to work, but not at a watermelon party; that was a man's party.

Nobody could open a melon as dramatically and as excitingly as Newt could. He would pick it up, put it on the table, thump it, and look at its curlicue. If the curlicue was dried and withered until it was as twisted as a pig's tail, that meant the melon was ripe. But if the curlicue was straight and still had green spots on it, then the melon wasn't ripe. Some people put their hands on a melon and pushed down; if the melon gave a cracking sound, then the melon was ripe. But Newt wouldn't do that; it broke the heart.

And all the time Harlan and I would be standing there with our tongues hanging out.

"Sounds ripe. Guess I'd better open it." Everybody would laugh. It's easy to make people laugh just before a nice, cool melon is opened.

He would pick up the butcher knife; it was long and had been sharpened so much it was partly worn away. He would stand the point of the knife on the melon, moving it back and forth to get it in just the right place ... you could hear us swallowing, already. Then finally, when the people thought they couldn't stand it any longer, he would shove the knife down—crack! I tell you there's not a finer sound in all the world than a watermelon opening up. There it would be—two great long shining red slabs with black seeds. "I'll give it a taste." With that he would cut off a sliver. Of course we knew what he was going to say, but we always waited anxiously. "Not bad. Not bad at all. I guess we'd better go ahead and munch a few bites." A few bites!—with Harlan and me drooling at the mouth.

"Pass 'em around, boys."

"Ladies first," Mrs. Kennedy would say but not very loud, for the others were not supposed to hear that.

Harlan and I would put a slice on a plate and a knife and fork and pass the plate around, ladies first.

RED STAR SPECIAL ACTIVE DRY YEAST DISSOLVES FASTER
30 MINUTE HOT CROSS BUNS
2 packages Red Star Special Active Dry Yeast
1¼ cups warm water (105° to 110° F.)
¼ cup sugar
1¼ teaspoons salt
1 egg
3 cups sifted all purpose flour
1 cup raisins
¼ cup chopped citron
1 teaspoon cinnamon
2 tablespoons shortening, melted and cooled to lukewarm
Step 1: Dissolve yeast in warm water (105° to 110° F.) in large mixing bowl. Step 2: Add sugar, salt, unbeaten egg, flour, raisins, citron and cinnamon. Beat well with electric mixer on low or medium speed, or by hand with large wooden spoon. Add shortening, beating until thoroughly mixed. Step 3: Spoon dough into well greased muffin pans, filling about one-third full. Step 4: Let rise in warm place (90° to 95° F.) until dough has risen level with top of muffin pans (about 25 to 30 minutes). Step 5: Bake in moderately hot oven (375° to 400° F.) 20 minutes. Step 6: Remove from pans and glaze with thin powdered sugar icing. When cool, make a cross on each with plain icing. Yields 18 to 24 buns.

Do You Want To Cut Your Federal Taxes?

Efficiency At Less Cost

Efficiency is necessary to reduce the cost of government. It is also imperative for our national prosperity. The Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government in its minute survey of the 1812 Federal agencies, boards, and departments, found a sad lack of effective housekeeping. This Commission, created by Congress with the approval of President Truman, was headed by former President Hoover. It has provided a vivid picture of the weaknesses in our present set-up, and suggested ways of increasing efficiency so that your taxes may be reduced.

Today thousands of tons of obsolete, useless records are stored in steel cabinets in expensive offices at maintenance charges of $29 per year each, when they could be kept in warehouses at a cost of only $2.15 per year each.

In 1922 the Department of Agriculture had about 22,000 employees and spent less than $26 million. In 1948 it had 82,000 employees and spent $934 millions of your hard-earned tax dollars. In a single Georgia cotton county, 47 employees of 7 separate USDA field services were handing out advice. A Washington State county had 184 Department agents and a Maryland county had 88 agents advising the heavily taxed farmers. A Missouri dairyman was "confused and irritated" when he recently received contradictory advice from five government agencies on how to fertilize his fields.

These are a few instance of the thousands discovered by the Commission where elimination of duplication would give increased efficiency and better service at less cost. If all of the recommendations of the Commission are adopted, the workers of this country would save between three and four billion dollars in taxes annually.

If you are interested in seeing these changes made in your government, tell your Congressman. Write the Citizens Committee for Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government, 1421 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia 2, Pennsylvania, for more information. Talk to your friends about it. These much-needed reforms cannot be made into law without your support.

"I know from experience... LAND O'LAKES is a GOOD OUTFIT"

says CLIFFORD HAGEN, Lowry, Minn., dairyman

An owner-patron of the Lowry Co-operative Creamery Association, Mr. Hagen says, "You get to know an organization pretty well when you deal with it so closely and so often. And I know from my own experience that LAND O'LAKES is a mighty good outfit. You get absolutely fair treatment. To me, that's one of the most important advantages of selling milk through LAND O'LAKES."

Yes, it's one of many advantages . . . including a more stable market, higher average returns over the years, savings on dairy farm equipment and supplies. If you sell milk, sell through LAND O'LAKES where every farmer gets the same square deal.

Let's encourage underground activity in Minnesota!

Lammon

"A prosperous and extended future for Minnesota mining lies in refining taconite iron-bearing ores, and in encouraging expensive underground mining," writes L. G. Lammon, editor of the Itasca Iron News. In his editorial favoring a "sound and stable" ore tax policy he goes on to say, "Every step of making ores merchantable prolongs the life of this district. The state should be for that."

AS EDITOR LAMMON KNOWS, much of Minnesota's high-grade surface ore has been dug. Now the iron ore industry must dig deeper. To do that, it needs the state's encouragement. Here are the reasons . . .

At least a third of our remaining ore lies deep below the surface. Rooting it out will be a tough, expensive job.

The ore must be blasted loose. It must be slushed into chutes, dumped into tram cars, hauled to the surface. Water must be pumped out, air pumped in . . . just to get at that necessary red earth.

A fortune has been sunk in underground mining. Much more must be invested. Yet these investments are a drop in the bucket compared to the sums that must go into ANOTHER kind of mining—production of low-grade and taconite ores.

These lower-quality ores must also be developed to extend the present supplies of shipping ore. This will be true conservation—it can prolong the life of the mining industry indefinitely. But there's the hard problem of costs to meet, and the hard problem of convincing investors that Minnesota wants to be fair to the iron ore industry.

To make a long story short, these future ores will all be more expensive to produce. But costs must be kept within reason if the ores are to be used. Rich new deposits of foreign ores have recently been found—and Minnesota ores must compete with them at the steel furnaces.

Whether ore production costs can be kept in line depends in part upon iron ore taxes.

Last year Minnesota's ore industry paid more than $27 million in local and state taxes. It is by far our most heavily taxed major industry. In fact no other state taxes ANY natural resource as heavily as we tax iron ore.

Agreed, Mr. Lammon. Minnesota needs a "sound and stable" tax policy—a policy that does not discriminate against iron ore mining.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars necessary to hasten the development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

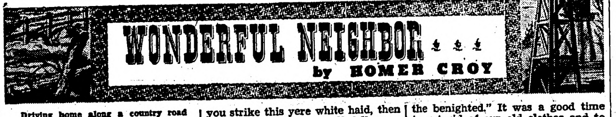
Hormone

ACTH is the pituitary hormone which has exhibited remarkable control over many hitherto intractable diseases. It is produced by the anterior lobe of the pituitary body, just under the brain in the center of the head. Its effect in the body is to stimulate the production of more than 28 hormones by the adrenal glands, one of which is over the kidney.



WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

Driving home along a country road amid the scenes of his youth, Homer Croy recalled the people he knew, the friends he had had as a child. A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, he was returning to places that revived memories of happy times with the Kennedys —Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He recalls how Anton Delinsky, the newly arrived "foreigner," almost let Newt shave off his beard "so he'd look more American," and how Newt finally gave up in utter disgust. Then there was that watermelon party at the Kennedy "mansion." It was a gala affair.

CHAPTER IX

After hours . . . so it seemed . . . Harlan and I would get some to eat. But no knives and forks for us; just the easy, natural way.

Conversation falls away; people too busy.

The telephone rings. "Go and see who it is," Mrs. Kennedy tells Lucy, who goes in and takes the phone off the hook.

"Enoch Knabb is sinking," she announces when she comes back.

A hush falls. No knives tapping the plates now.

"He was always a good neighbor," Newt says. "I never knew anybody more accommodating."

"It's going to be hard on his wife," Mrs. Kennedy shakes her head sadly. She always thought of things from the woman's point of view.

The other women nod. "How long were they married?" someone asks.

"Twenty-nine years," Grandpa says promptly. "They were married the year after Grasshopper Year."

"I suppose it'll be at Cain's," comes from Mr. Willhoyte. Cain's was where the pioneers were laid. It was on the old Cain farm.

At last we are so full some of us are panting a little. We just sit there and rest. The dog comes over and lies down by Harlan; Harlan pulls his ears gently. Fireflies flick by.

Anton Delinsky eats silently and moodily. Finally he says he is thinking of summer melons back home. "Mooch better in old country."

"That's foolishness, Anton," declares Newt; "there's no better melon than a Missouri sidehill."

Newt tries to argue with him, but the more Newt argues the more set in his opinion Delinsky becomes. Newt says, "Well, if everything is so much better where you came from, why don't you go back?"

Sadness comes into Delinsky's face. "Get lonesome sometimes. It iss hard to get opp an' leave your country."

"Well," says Newt, put down, "I can understand that. It is natural to like where you was born. How about some mushmelon? There's nothing better than our yellow-bottoms."

"Yah," says Anton.

The incident is over; Anton's moment of homesickness is gone.

A guinea lets off a potrack.

"Rain tomorrow," announces Mr. Willhoyte.

"Good for the corn," comes from Mr. Trullinger.

We always thought about everything in relation to corn; corn was our biggest crop. If there wasn't corn, we had a hard year. Sometimes Mrs. Kennedy would say, "It seems to me we're always having hard years."

"We manage to get along pretty well," Newt would say.

Sometimes she'd say: "People in town have an easier time."

Occasionally we'd feel sorry for ourselves. Then we'd hear about the poor people in the Ozarks, or in the hardpan section of Kansas or in the alkali section of Nebraska and we would thank God we were so well off. Of course there was always lots of work to do. Sometimes we'd make up barrels of clothes to send to these poor people; sometimes we'd get a letter back thanking us. Then we'd feel thankful all over again how lucky we were.

While Harlan and I was resting, Newt would say, "Boys."

Everybody expects boys to do all the work at a melon party. The girls never do anything; just sit there. Harlan and I gather up the rinds and put them in the wash boiler and carry it out to the chicken yard, dump the rinds out on the ground and bring the wash boiler back for another load. More work.

"Suppose we bring out the graphophone," says Newt. "Boys!"

'The Flogging Of Uncle Tom'

But Harlan and I didn't care, even if it did mean more work; anybody would like to bring out a graphophone, for the "graphophone" was the finest entertainment we had; and the Kennedys had an especially good one.

There it was, in its box and with it was a mammoth horn held up by an iron tripod and a hook.

"Who's got a favorite?" Newt would ask.

Harlan and I always had a favorite because it was the most exciting: "Flogging Scene From Uncle Tom's Cabin. With Incidental Music."

Newt would wind up the graphophone and give the lever a flip. There would be a dull scratching; then suddenly a voice would bellow: "Flogging Scene From Uncle Tom's Cabin. With Incidental Music." There would be more grinding; then Uncle Tom's quavery old voice would say: "Please don't Massa. If you strike this yere white haid, then the hand of Hebben will fall upon you."

Simon Legree snarled something, Uncle Tom's trembling voice replied, then suddenly the air was filled with the most dreadful sounds.

"I can still hear the crack of the bull whips in a mudhole," Grandpa would say.

Then, just as suddenly as it had started, the noise would stop. We had a colored preacher—the Reverend Clarence Baker—who preached on Sundays at his church, but helped us at haying time. Pa always asked him to say grace; and the Reverend Baker would bow his head and say a fine grace. When Uncle Tom was being flogged, I always saw the Reverend Clarence Baker there on his knees, tears streaming down his face, receiving the terrible blows. Nobody could speak for a few moments, so vivid, so terrible had the scene been. "I don't think we'll ever better put that on again," Mrs. Kennedy would say. But we all knew it would be the first next time there was a party.

Another was "Cummings' Indian Congress at Coney Island." I didn't know what an Indian Congress was (I'm still not quite sure) but it had the most bloodcurdling shrieks in the world—even worse than Uncle Tom's. In addition there were the Indian war songs and the beat of their war drums . . . then the terrifying, pitiful shrieks of the poor white settlers.

Sometimes Mrs. Kennedy would say, "It seems to me we're always having hard years."

'Heathens' Turn Out To Be Missionaries

Someone sings out, "Uncle Josh" and everybody smiles. Uncle Josh Weathersby was a farmer like us, but he wasn't as smart as we were. Sometimes he would be trying to learn to ride a bicycle; a lady would come along and he would try to tip his hat and dodge a streetcar at the same time. Sometimes he would be in a Chinese laundry trying to get his washing, but he had lost his tickee, as the Chinaman called it. Pretty soon we would all be laughing, having forgotten all about Uncle Tom and the poor white settlers.

Newt would look at his watch and say, "I guess we'd better have President McKinley." The record read: "Address at the Funeral of our Martyred President, William McKinley." The solemn tones and the slow music moved and stirred us. We knew the story of how the assassin had shot President McKinley down at the Buffalo Exposition, and we thought of that as the orator told about the noble William McKinley. After it was over, no one could speak.

Finally Anton says: "How is President choosed?"

As Newt tells him, Anton nods from time to time and says, "Yah, yah, iss goot."

"I expect we'd better think about goin'," Mr. Willhoyte says.

The women go out back, the men light the lanterns. Pa goes over and stands by Newt and the two talk in low tones; man talk. Mr. Willhoyte says: "Well, Newt, my colt stood and sucked, so I guess I've got to pay you for your service."

"Any time you find it convenient," says Newt.

The women come back, politely pretending they haven't been anywhere, and soon everybody is moving across the yard. The horses begin to paw and whinny; the lanterns mean they can go home. Delinsky seizes Newt's hand. "Have fine time." In a few moments the people are in their buggies and spring wagons and going down the road; the light from the lanterns gets smaller and smaller and finally disappears behind the osage hedges.

Work tomorrow.

One Sunday our preacher announced that the following Sunday was to be Foreign Missions Day. This was something to look forward to, for, on Foreign Missions Day, we always brought our old clothes and packed them in barrels for what the preacher called "the heathen and the benighted." It was a good time to get rid of our old clothes and to feel we were also serving God.

But on this special day, the preacher said we were not to bring our old clothes and that no barrels would be packed. This sounded strange. It probably meant money.

Next Sabbath, when we tied up at the hitch racks, we got a surprise. The word flashed around that the preacher had two heathens in the church! We went to the windows and peeked through and there, sure enough, were two heathens sitting on the deacon's side. Our eyes nearly popped out; never before in our lives had we seen the benighted people we had been sending our old clothes to.

They had on the strangest, the most outlandish clothes, we had ever seen. One of the heathens was a man, the other a woman; the woman had an ivory fan; now and then she would open the fan, wave it back and forth, then drop it in her lap. Our women had palm-leaf fans and in the summer would swish them back and forth while listening to the sermon. It was a bit of a shock to find the heathen had better fans than we had. Maybe we shouldn't have rushed off our old clothes so fast.

The preacher began slow, for he knew he had something good; no one, today, was going to pretend the colt had got tangled up in the harness. He told about what splendid work our American missionaries were doing and what a blessed privilege it was to save the souls of the benighted and win their hearts to God. Then he read some statistics about how many had been saved. The number seemed tremendous. But there were, he said, millions yet to be saved. That was discouraging.

Finally he got to what everybody was waiting for. He said we were privileged to have with us, this Sabbath, Brother and Sister Miller who had just returned from performing a splendid work in Japan. Well, that was a shock. "Brother and Sister." They were not heathen at all. They were far above us, for they were missionaries doing God's work in a foreign land, while all we did was to stay at home and think only of ourselves. It made us feel pretty cheap.

"I will now introduce Brother Miller."

Brother Miller stood up and we had a good look at his Japanese clothes; they would never do for farming. His shoes were held on by straps between his toes. He wouldn't get very far in a muddy milk lot.

Suddenly Brother Miller smiled and said, "Ohio!" We thought that was where he was from, but it turned out this was the Japanese word for "How-are-you?"

"Now, let's all get acquainted and say it together—Ohio"! So we all said it together. "Now let the women say it." The women said it. "Now let the men say it." We said it.

We found we had misjudged him, for he began to tell about how poor the people of Japan were and how they had to plow with a cow on one side and the wife on the other. That was far, far worse than the Delinskys. About all they raised was rice; also they had some fish. At night they had to sleep on the floor. We felt sorrier and sorrier for the poor Japanese and saw how exceedingly lucky we were. None of us had to sleep on the floor except when company came. But that was not all, as we soon found; mothers had to sling their children in pokes over their backs and work in the rice fields with their children crying and sobbing. So vivid and stirring was his description that we could hardly keep from sobbing ourselves. Thank God! we lived in wonderful America where no woman had to carry her baby out to the field in a sling over her back. The Japanese loved their farms, he said; we understand that. Any farmer would.

'The Boy Who Did Not Love Flowers'

There was one boy who was called, The Boy Who Did Not Love Flowers. Everybody in Japan loved God's beautiful flowers except this mean boy who didn't love anything except himself. He would walk across a flower bed and pull up flowers and shake the dirt off their roots. I hated that boy; and so did everybody else. But it worked out all right, for he was converted to the true religion of God and gave up destroying flowers.

Also there was a bad man who smoked, drank sake, and gambled. His children had to go out on the street and beg. One day the man came to the mission, heard a sermon, confessed his sins and was saved. The children didn't have to beg and the family was happy once more. And so were we.

He told other stories and we felt more and more sorry for the poor Japanese. Then he said his wife could play the samisen and sing in the Japanese language. Before our astonished eyes his wife reached under the seat, pulled out something that looked like a hired man's banjo, walked out in her foreign clothes, sat down on a chair in the middle of the preaching platform and began to play and sing. Never, never had there been anything like this in our church. What exceedingly lucky people we were.

"The dam must have burst," thought the judge as the talkative lawyer spoke on and on and on. He listened for a few minutes.

"Well, now," he informed the lawyer when he was able to get a word in, "I do believe you have stated your case fully and completely. I therefore award the decision to your client."

The lawyer thanked him very much but seemed to have a few points he didn't want to waste. He continued to talk and it was fully five minutes before the judge could interrupt him again.

"Despite your arguments," he said firmly, "I am fully convinced that your client should win the case."

Sammy Snead Is Gallery Favorite

By GRANTLAND RICE

SAMUEL JACKSON SNEAD was an ex-hillbilly around Hot Springs, Va., some 20 years ago. He was a caddie who could break 70. The late Hal Sims, who knew how to win a bet, had Snead for his caddie in those days. Sam toted the golf bag barefooted. Hal would say to some opponent who could break 30, "I'll bet you so much my caddie can beat you." Hal's opponent would take a look at barefoot Sam, then around 15 or 16 years old, and bet plenty. Whereupon young Sam would turn in a 69 or a 70.

Grantland Rice

This year of 1950 is many, many years later. Sammy Snead is now practically baldheaded. But there is still a grin on his lips, a twinkle in his eye and close companionship with his galleries. He is a good actor and a real comedian. He is a friendly guy you can't help but like. Above all, he has the finest swing in golf today. Many who know will tell you he has the finest swing of all time, including Bobby Jones and Harry Vardon.

Sammy carries big galleries because he stirs up their admiration by his brilliant play from tee to green and then calls on their sympathy by often blowing two and three-foot putts to prove he is strictly human. On the days when he is putting well he has no one close. He is the only golfer I know who can putt raggedly and still keep close to the top.

Snead led the field in earnings and scoring through 1949. He is on his way to do the same in 1950. Counting his share in the big money tournaments in California, Arizona and the recent Texas Open, Samuel Jackson had a winning total of $7,558 so far for 1950. This is a lead of $3,000 over second-place Jimmy Demaret. Snead is slowly wending his way to Florida and more tournaments.

"I generally don't get along until I reach Florida," he told me. "The puttin' miseries keep me back until then. This time I've started earlier. Maybe I'll flop quicker." Snead has run 1-2 in most of his starts to date. This is terrific pace against golfers shooting 63's and 65's, not an uncommon experience over these western courses. It takes 10 under par to get in the money, and 15 or 16 under par is needed to win. There isn't any question but that the golf of today is the hottest ever played. But that doesn't mean Jones and Hagen and others couldn't have matched this same clip, or surpassed it. Gene Sarazen, the only member of the old school to hang on, has certainly matched it on numerous occasions after passing 45.

Sammy Snead isn't one of the kids. He isn't a new arrival. He was peeling the hide off par 20 years ago. And he's still the best we have, especially with Ben Hogan unable to meet the killing P.G.A. tournament schedule.

Fifty-Year Ratings

Most of the 50-year or half century ratings of leading athletes have been quite sound. A few haven't. For example, as Ed Barrow expressed it, "Cobb should have been much closer to Ruth. As great as the Babe was, he wasn't quite as good as Cobb."

Barrow in his heart puts Hans Wagner over both men as the greatest ballplayer of all time. John McGraw backed him up. The main idea being that a great infielder has something on a great outfielder for all-around usefulness.

Another error came in rating Walter Hagen so far down. Hagen won eleven national titles. Neither Hogan nor Nelson nor Snead has ever come close to this record.

One trouble is that so many of those voting never saw the Hagen from 1914 through 1930. Hagen without any question had the finest tournament disposition of them all, with Ben Hogan second. Hagen won five P.G.A. titles, four of them in a row from 1924 through 1927. He won 29 out of 30 consecutive matches in P.G.A. championships. Let's see the name of anyone else who ever matched this. Hagen won two U.S. and four British Opens against the finest golfers.

The Case of Blackwell

One of baseball's leading tragedies is the case of Ewell Blackwell. There is some hope this season that the tragedy might be turned into melodrama, similar to the stories of Ben Hogan and Citation.

Three years ago, Blackwell was the best pitcher in baseball, barring nobody at all. He pitched a no-hitter with the Reds and two or three days later pitched eight innings of another no-hitter.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

QUESTION: How would you remove a spot on an office floor about 2x4 feet, caused by dragging feet when spinning in chair from desk to typewriter, without sanding the whole floor? The floor has had a coat of stain and two coats of shellac.

ANSWER: Take off the remains of the shellac by quick wiping with denatured alcohol. Then apply one or two coats of fresh shellac, thinning them down with denatured alcohol, about one-half. Feather out the strokes. Do not expect perfect results. If you intend to do over the whole floor at some time, you might consider a penetrating floor wax or penetrating floor seal. These finishes are not apt to show scratches.

WHAT A STORM!

THE WORST SINCE 1932!

When the first storm-warnings were sounded Monday, March 6, our crews were alerted for emergency duty. By evening the worst storm we've experienced since 1932 was sweeping a path of destruction across North Dakota—and by Tuesday morning had penetrated Minnesota and South Dakota.

Mile after mile of ice-covered transmission line went down under the fury of 60 to 100 mile-an-hour winds. More than 1000 poles were broken off like so much match wood. Practically every community served by the Otter Tail Power Company was deprived of electric service, either wholly or partially. Approximately 60 towns were "blacked out" completely.

Service to most points has now been restored. Now the reconstruction work begins—the job of rebuilding the miles of lines which were completely destroyed. This Herculean task will take many months.

For their understanding and patience, we extend our gratitude to the thousands of Otter Tail customers who endured the privations of being without electricity during the devastating storm. Our thanks go also not only to our own employees but to all those who helped us restore service during those trying days.

N. Sollom Leaves for So. Amer.

A very impressive service was held Sunday afternoon at Newfolden at which time Miss Norma Sollom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kittle Sollom, received her commission as a missionary to South America. The church was filled to capacity with friends from far and near to bid Miss Sollom farewell and God's speed on her journey. Miss Sollom will serve this mission field under the Evangelical Mission Board of Chicago. She left Wednesday and after a few days in Chicago and New York will sail on March 29.

Miss Sollom leaves a host of friends and prayer supporters behind as she leaves her loved ones and community to serve the Lord Jesus Christ in South America. May God bless and use her there to the salvation of many precious souls to the Lord!

Much Interest in Barley Contest

Contestants in the 4th Annual Barley Contest are sending in their entries in the $5,800 contest sponsored by the Minnesota Brewers Association.

This contest, which offers prizes of $5,800 in cash to the growers of prize malting barley in 23 Minnesota counties, is appealing especially to the growers in this community.

The purpose is to encourage production and marketing of quality barley which can be used for malting and to acquaint the farmers with the greater profit possibilities in malting barley. It also emphasized the importance of using proved varieties of malting barley. Contestants are limited to 5 varieties: Barbless Wis. 38, Kindred (L), OAC 21 (Artic),

The contest was started four years ago, and while it is sponsored by the Minnesota Brewers Association, it is conducted with the cooperation of the University of Minnesota Department of Agriculture, the Minnesota and Northwest Crop Improvement Associations, and the Minnesota Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food.

Otter Tales
By Reddy Kilowatt

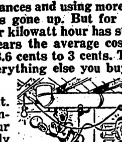
A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

I've been digging. Last month I mentioned the Silver Anniversary of the start of rural electrification, which had its beginnings in Minnesota back in 1925. Since then, I've been digging for facts concerning the first rural service offered by the Otter Tail Power Company. Seems that only a year after the experiments with the first rural line at Red Wing, Minnesota, which the Otter Tail Power Company helped develop, the company energized lines to several farms near Fairmount, North Dakota.

Mrs. Charles R. Pinkney of Fairmount recalls the day power reached their farm home, in a letter to local superintendent R. W. Fraasch at Fairmount. "It was a thrilling event," she wrote, "and all day long the children kept asking when they could turn the lights on." The Pinkney's first electrical appliance was a "fireless" stove. It's still used from time to time.

The Pinkney's—like hundreds of other farm families—have found dozens of other uses for electricity since those first days of having lights in their farm home. Today electricity milks cows and separates the milk, saws wood and grinds feed, heats water, washes clothes, cooks meals and does many other tasks in both the city and farm home.

But what's happened to the cost of electricity in the years since it first started making life easier? Actually, because everybody is operating more appliances and using more electricity, the average light bill has gone up. But for those same reasons, the average cost per kilowatt hour has steadily gone down. In the last ten years the average cost per kilowatt hour has dropped from 3.6 cents to 3 cents. That's a 17 per cent decrease, when everything else you buy has increased from 21% to 104%.



Which brings up another point. Like a team of horses in the twenties or a tractor nowadays, your electric wiring system can pull only a certain sized load. Many homes were wired before electricity did the many jobs it does today, and in many cases, more appliances have been added than the wiring was made to stand. Remember . . . faulty wiring is a fire hazard!

It might be a good idea now to have a competent electrician examine your wiring. A check-up doesn't take much time or effort, and can prevent a lot of possible trouble besides improve the efficiency of your electric appliances.

Keeping in Character

A business man was showing his farmer friend the city. During the course of the day's excursion they entered a cafe, one of the exclusive sort with bar. As the pair approached, the bartender uttered the usual, "What'll you have gents?"

To the amazement of the farmer his friend said: "Make mine a sidecar buddy."

"How about you, mister?" The bartender pointed at the farmer.

"Oh!" exclaimed the hayseed triumphantly, "I'll have just a plain horse and buggy."

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along the country road amid scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar places, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Lucy and Ida; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He recalls happy times like the watermelon party at Kennedys, where they played "The Flogging of Uncle Tom" and "The Cummings' Indian Congress at Coney Island" on the old "graphophone." Then there was the time they heard two Japanese speak in their church of the need for more Christian missionary work among the "heathens" in their native land.

CHAPTER X

Now we would have what Brother Miller called "the tea ceremony." With that they took some dishes and a teapot and Sister Miller pretended she was serving. Brother Miller took a cup of tea and bowed very low. She bowed low, too, while we leaned forward hardly breathing at all, although there wasn't anything in the cups. Then they pretended to drink. Once in a while Sister Miller would look at him out of the corners of her eyes, smile and shake her fan. Then he would smile and shake his fan. Finally it was all over. Sister Miller bowed very deep and went off in a little pigeon-toed trot that made our eyes pop.

And now Brother Miller said there would be a "freewill offering" for the people of Japan who were so pathetically eager to worship the true God instead of a horrible stone monster with a huge stomach. We must give liberally; even a dime might save some poor soul. Newt went up and down the aisle holding out the collection plate and mumbling over and over, "It's God's work. It's God's work." Scarred hands went into pockets. Clink! Clink! Thank God for every dime.

At last it was all over. Brother and Sister Miller took the money and put it in a black purse. People rushed up to invite them to Sunday dinner. I hoped Newt would get them. But Newt didn't get them and Brother and Sister Miller and the preacher went off with another family. That evening Brother and Sister Miller would be driven to town so they could go to some other place and carry on their fine work.

Finally we came in sight of Newt's. The windmill first, then the white house and the red barn, and the silo. Newt's eyes leaped over everything; the cattle were not in the corn, no hogs were out, no horse was on the barbed wire. How good God had been to us.

One day Newt was picking apples when Delinsky came hurrying through the orchard, stopped at the foot of the ladder and looked up at Newt. He was so choked with emotion he could hardly speak. "Somezing iss matter wit' Anton," he got out in his thick accent. He could talk better now than when he had come to the Welcome Party, but when excited, he was hard to understand. He still looked queer with his big beard and his odd clothes. But we had stopped making fun of him; we were beginning to discover he was a real person.

"What is the matter?" asked Newt, instantly compelled by Delinsky. Newt's heart flew out to anyone in trouble.

"Anton iss dyin'."

"Dying?" repeated Newt, coming down the ladder as fast as he could.

"Where is he?"

"Tied out in front."

That didn't make sense.

"Come," said Delinsky. It sounded more like "Gum."

Delinsky Makes A Bad Bargain

Newt took the sack off his shoulders and followed Delinsky who was clopping through the orchard as fast as he could go.

They turned the corner of the house and there, tied to the hitch rack, was a horse. "Is that Anton?" gasped Newt. "Say, you had the daylights scared out of me!" For Newt thought Delinsky had meant one of the boys.

"Yah. I get me a new horse and nim him for me."

Newt blinked. Just like a Rooshan, naming a horse for himself.

"Why, that animal isn't sick; he's a fine-looking animal!" said Newt in disgust. No one was a better judge of horses than Newt.

"Iss dyin'," repeated Delinsky firmly.

Delinsky shook his head sadly. "Iss dyin'."

Suddenly it did seem very much indeed as if the horse were dying, for he seized the hitch rack, baring his teeth and began to suck air and roar, giving forth monstrous bloodcurdling gasps and terrible snorts and bellows.

"Iss dyin'."

Newt looked serious. "Where did you get him?"

He knew how much the animal meant to Delinsky.

"Vagons."

Newt had to think a moment. A band of horse-trading gypsies had been through a few days before and Delinsky had traded horses with them.

"You traded that good horse of yours that could understand Rooshan to gypsies?" Newt demanded.

"Yah."

Newt shook his head. "This looks like a good animal, Anton, but don't ever trade horses with gypsies. They're the slickest horse traders in the world. That's the way they make a living — fortune telling, chicken-stealing an' horse trading."

Delinsky looked at the ground. This horse was so much bigger than his and seemed so much stronger, he said.

"Did the gypsies keep him moving when they were showing him to you?"

"Yah."

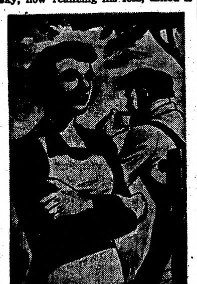
"Did they keep him away from wood?"

"Yah."

"Well, I'll tell you what you've got. You've got a windcribber!"

Delinsky looked puzzled. "Iss what?"

This was an animal who had the disgusting habit of seizing hitch racks, mangers, or any pieces of wood and, sucking air into its stomach. If it did this on a hot day, after feeding, the animal would bloat up and have the colic. It would be worthless as a work animal. Delinsky, now realizing his loss, asked if the animal could be broken of the nauseating habit. Newt examined the animal's neck; there was the imprint of a strap.



Mrs. Kennedy came out and politely asked him to have dinner with them.

"Some animals, if taken in time, can be broken. They've tied the strap around his throat, but it hasn't worked." He opened the horse's mouth. "Look!" Delinsky came closer. "You see how his teeth are worn. An animal that has it as bad as yours isn't any good in the world. He might as well be shot."

Tragedy leaped into Delinsky's face. "No! No! Haf only vun horse. So much to plow."

"Well, you shouldn't have traded," said Newt, pretty well disgusted with the stupid foreigner. "Why didn't you ask me?"

Delinsky shook his head bewilderedly. "He so beeg an' sthrong."

"Only a fool will trade with gypsies. You're always doing things wrong. And a beard like that!" Newt's bitterness over the Russian's endless mistakes welled up. "Another thing. You don't have to plant potatoes by the moon. No farmer with any sense does that any more."

"Iss goot," said Delinsky stubbornly.

"If you think you know so much about farming, then go ahead and starve to death! You live right behind the poorhouse; move in there. That's where you belong."

Delinsky studied the horse: "Vhat do?"

"He's your horse. You do fool things so you've got to suffer. Put your cow back in harness."

Delinsky took the halter rope in his hand.

Delinsky started down the road stubbornly on the right.

Something about the pathos of this bearded foreigner seemed to touch Newt, for Newt was extremely kindhearted; his pique was over. "Wait! I'll see what I can do."

A look of wondering thankfulness came into Delinsky's dark eyes. "Can you cure him?"

"Maybe."

Delinsky seized his hand. "Oh plizz t'ank Godt!"

Newt Rectifies Delinsky's Mistake

"You pick my apples and I'll see what I can do. But remember, I don't promise anything."

The horse was taken back to the hitch rack and Delinsky went out and climbed up the ladder. In a few minutes Newt came out of the house with the musket over his shoulder. Delinsky tumbled down the ladder. "Don't plizz!" he cried. "Don't never."

"Go back to the apples," ordered Newt.

Delinsky stood torn by doubt, looking first at Newt, then at the horse, finally, bowing his head, he started slowly back to the ladder.

In spite of himself, Delinsky watched the dramatic scene unfold before his eyes. Saw Newt go to the shed and back out the cart, then bring Clayton and put him between the shafts. Then put the musket in. Then saw Newt get in, put the musket between his knees, shake the lines and start down the road with the windcribber jogging along behind.

Delinsky picked without spirit, filling the sack, taking it down into the cellar, pouring the apples into the bin, then going slowly back and climbing the ladder again.

The day wore on.

Mrs. Kennedy came out and politely asked him to have dinner with them. He hesitated, wanting to, but feeling he would be ill at ease among such fashionable people. Finally he went in and sat almost silently as the others ate.

During the afternoon, from his perch, he saw something his eyes could hardly believe. But there it was! Newt was coming down the road with the windcribber jogging behind. Thank God! a windcribber was better than no horse at all. Delinsky got down the ladder and hurried to the drive lot, then stared exceedingly hard, for this was not the windcribber at all, but his own horse! Delinsky threw his arms around his neck as if the horse were a long-lost child. How? how? how? he kept repeating, almost blubbering, so foolish was he. His own, his wonderful horse!

Newt enjoyed Delinsky's delight and utter amazement. He had followed the gypsies, Newt said, and at last had caught up with them. They were in camp, strange pictures painted on their wagons—the fortune-telling, chicken-stealing, smokehouse-robbing gypsies. The surly, evil men, with rings in their ears, had gathered around him; they would not trade back, they said menacingly. They would, Newt said. And they did. And now, after the first joy of having his precious horse back, Delinsky turned to Newt, seeming to comprehend for the first time that Newt with his musket might have done something exceedingly serious. But Newt only smiled. "It wasn't loaded."

At last the rejoicing was over—the big moment had passed — and Delinsky, the halter rope in his hand, started down the road toward home leading his horse.

It was not long after this that Anton Delinsky came again to Newt's, this time pleased and excited. He had bought him a second horse; he was no longer a one-horse farmer.

My world was an expanding one. The D. Ward King road-drag was performing wonders. Sometimes I went to the other side of the county to Uncle Will Sewell's and stayed two or three days. He had a fringe of beard that ran around the edge of his jaw like brown lace.

Harlan and I Discuss City Girls

Not only was my world expanding geographically but also intellectually, for there were the debates, the spelling schools, the ciphering matches and our wonderful chautauquas. I can still see the great tent and the rows and rows of foot-wide planks which made the seats. They just about broke our backs, but we were learning things and were hearing about a world we had never seen. Thrilling talkers stood on that platform. One was P. G. Holden, of Iowa, who told us how to raise better corn.

We looked down on girls and womenfolks, as everybody did; it took men to do work and run things. Women were necessary but not up to our standard. But now—suddenly and mysteriously—girls were becoming tremendously fascinating. Sometimes we even said we'd like to attend a strawberry festival, go inside the church where the girls were sitting, and ask one to come out and eat.

Girls were divided into two classes: country girls and city girls. We stood completely in awe of city girls. They led dainty existences; they were unapproachable. Never in their lives had they put on a pair of gum boots and milked a cow on a rainy night. Yet, now and then, we did get acquainted with one. Sometimes it was at the grocery; sometimes we managed to work up an acquaintance on the street. But not often, as the girls' parents didn't want the girls to have anything to do with farm boys.

The best time was Farmers' Day. On this day the city men and women had to cook a rabbit dinner for the farmers and serve it in the basement of the church. We didn't have to work; just sit there and eat and have the city people wait on us. It was nice. The city girls waited on the table and sometimes we got acquainted with one. But mostly we were so tongue-tied we couldn't think of anything to say. We would just eat. The next time we saw the girl we would look at her hopefully; sometimes she would speak to us and our hearts would give a thump.

Harlan and I even talked about "going" with city girls. But it was only talk; we knew we would never get that high up.

The widow's late husband had been a drunkard and a shiftless good-for-nothing but she managed to scrape up enough money for a nice funeral.

The preacher who read the funeral services hadn't known the man and began to speak eloquently of the sterling virtues of the deceased. It was when the preacher told what a model husband and fine, upstanding citizen the deceased was that the widow nudged her small son and said:

"Jimmy, go over and look at the corpse. We must have gotten into the wrong funeral services."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

New Aids Asked for Farm Support; Coal Industry Seeks Strike Peace; Unemployment Surges to New Peaks

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FARM SUPPORTS:

New Aids Asked

Charles Brannan, U.S. secretary of agriculture, was still plumping for adoption of his (Brannan plan) system for farm price supports, arguing that new price aids must be provided now.

Pointing out that there is trouble getting rid of 1948 farm surpluses even as 1949 surpluses are pouring in, Brannan said the disposal problem "points to the need of supplementary action on price supports, particularly with respect to more efficient methods than procedures for handling price supports of perishable commodities."

THE agriculture secretary may have had a point there, but the main question was: Would his plan of letting farm products find their own levels on the price market, with subsidies making up the difference—provide an adequate solution?

Up to this point, he had been unable to convince congress that it would. What luck he would have in the future was wholly problematical. But there was no arguing the point that something needed to be done to clear up the muddled farm price support program. As it was being operated, federal farm policy seemed to be getting worse the farther it went.

Brannan was eminently correct when he admitted the present price support system programs "encourage over-production on one hand, and under-consumption on the other . . . and to find sufficiently new uses for the surpluses, or to divert them into non-commercial channels at anything comparable to the support price usually is impossible."

SUMMING UP, Brannan said: "Briefly, the outlook includes the likelihood of some further contraction in the total demands for U.S. farm products and points to the need for adjustment in production if a favorable price level is to be maintained."

The problem indeed was a grave one and made even more grave by the fact that the administration may be caught in a trap that has been long in the making—a trap created by the fact that having so long experienced the subsidy aid as is, farmers won't like any tampering with the program and might visit their ill will on anyone who may do so.

LEWIS:

A Fine Largess

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America—a labor union which does not pay its members strike benefits and which subjects them to untold misery and hardship during strike periods—was offering a victory-flushed one-million-dollar loan to the C.I.O. United Automobile Workers union.

THE PURPOSE of the loan would be to help the UAW win new contracts from Chrysler and General Motors. Lewis wrote Walter Reuther, head of the giant auto workers union, that wage-welfare improvements in the coal industry were fought by money interests linked with "the financial group" which dominates car-making.

He added that this aid is needed so "your union may be assured beyond preadventure, of success in its present struggle." Reuther was in the midst of a long strike for pensions at Chrysler corporation. At the time of Lewis' offer, it was estimated UAW workers had lost 35 million dollars in pay and the company 250 million dollars.

Help for Reuther was authorized at a jubilant meeting of Lewis with his top union aides, where Lewis was said to have boasted that he had "licked" the strike-emergency injunction provision of the Taft-Hartley law, inasmuch as a federal court injunction issued under the law failed to halt the coal strike.

MOST of the big U.S. industrial concerns feared that Lewis' victory over the coal operators in the matter of wage increases and additional health and welfare benefits would touch off a series of strikes as other unions sought to do as well for themselves.

Coal was being mined again and industry's wheels were turning, but the immediate future apeared grim and uncertain. The question seemed to be: When and where will the next strike erupt? It seemed inevitable to even a casual observer that another round of wage-hike fights was in the making.

FRENCH-SAAR:

U.S. Worried

United States high level diplomats had a new and aggravating problem on their hands: The suddenly critical French-German split over the Saar region.

The situation was complicated when France and the semi-independent government of the coal-rich Saar signed a pact under which France would take the Saar's coal for the next 50 years which the German Chancellor resented.

Communist?

A sensation was caused in British political circles when Lord Beaverbrook's conservative London Evening Standard named War Minister John Strachey (above) "an avowed Communist."

COAL:

A Look Ahead

The most crippling coal strike in the nation's history had come to an end. Miners were pouring back into the pits and allied industries, faced with a threat of total shutdown, were reviving and calling men back to work.

John L. Lewis, United Mine Worker chieftian, apparently had won again. He had obtained a raise in pay for the miners along with additional health and welfare benefits.

But as the nation relaxed with a sigh of relief that the production-stop threat had been removed, leaders in the coal industry began to look farther ahead—to examine methods by which a permanent coal peace might be won.

Leading mine operators stated they hoped to complete arrangements to have Harry W. Moses, head of the "captive" mine subsidiaries of the Unitted States Steel corporation, to leave big steel and devote all his time to handling the coal industry's dealings with Lewis.

APPOINTMENT of Moses as a full-time representative of the soft coal industry in its relations with the UMW is designed as a move to end the chaotic conditions that have existed in the mine fields for years. The move has the support of virtually all the principal operators in the north and west and was expected to win strong favor among southern operators as well.

A lasting industry peace has long been the goal of operators and the public, which is beginning to tire of the almost annual war of nerves between the mine union boss and operators while the nation stands almost helpless without fuel.

JOBLESS:

Hit New Peak

Again jobless numbers in the United States had catapulted to a new high, and again the federal commerce department appeared unperturbed about it.

Unemployment rose to 4,684,000 in February—the highest figure since 1941—when the total was 5,620,000.

DESPITE THE FACT that many industrial and economic leaders professed to see danger in the situation, the commerce department came up with the usual bland, unconcerned explanation as to the cause of the big jump in unemployment.

As was stated in January when jobless figures appeared alarming, commerce department boss said:

"The slight rise in unemployment between January and February (204,000) appears to be due mainly to seasonal increase in the labor force and not to any cutbacks in employment."

But was that the case? Wasn't it logical to assume that an "increase in the labor force"—meaning unemployed but available labor—meant a corresponding lack of employment for that same force.

IT WAS SIGNIFICANT, many observers felt, that the figure as reported did not include striking workmen, a fact that meant the unemployment picture was not distorted in that sense.

Why was unemployment apparently steadily increasing? How would the "seasonal turnover" explanation hold water? If there were serious threat of widespread unemployment in the nation, it seemed the government should ascertain the fact.

ARCTIC ARMY

Large masses of men never could be pitted against each other in Alaska, or other Arctic wastes, as they were in the last war, according to military experts who led the recent mock warfare in the Alaska sub-Arctic; but they couldn't agree on why that is the case. One reason given was difficulty of transporting supplies, another was that there simply isn't enough room.

Aga Kahn Sees U.S. Strength as Hope For World

NEW DELHI, INDIA.—The Aga Khan raised his vast bulk in bed—to which he had retired with a slight cold—laid aside London and New York newspapers received by air mail and delivered an impressive half hour of opinion on the hydrogen bomb, the world political situation, begum Aly Khan (Rita Hayworth), his personal wealth and the matching of his weight in platinum in 1954 by his religious followers, which will bring in several million dollars.

The hereditary imam (leader) of the Ismaili sect of Moslems said that he tipped the scales at 225 pounds the last time he was weighed and estimated that when his body was balanced against platinum four years from now in his jubilee ceremonies at Bombay, Karachi, and either Dar es Salaam or Nairobi, he will gain the equivalent of about a million dollars in each place.

He declared that he would contribute the entire amount to various foundations for the betterment of his people in countries where the contributions were made. His weight was matched in diamonds in 1945 on his 60th birthday anniversary.

Aga Khan, who among many other activities of his busy and colorful life has been an international statesman, sees the United States as the present world's "only hope" and he thinks Americans should build hydrogen bombs and arm to the teeth at once lest some other nation use the superbomb first and start a war that destroys civilization.

"If the United States is suddenly submerged by a war for which it is not prepared the whole world will go down," he declared. Urging that America readopt Theodore Roosevelt's maxim, "Walk softly but carry a big stick," he added: "I beg with my small voice for what it may be worth, America be strong—have a big stick, the biggest stick of all."

The potentate said that a strong United States would "keep all other nations in order" and restore free trade.

A farm editor looks at iron ore

"Sitting down here in the farm country, it is hard to grasp the reasoning of those who would heap more taxes upon Minnesota's iron ore industry." So writes J. W. Garberson, editor, The Marshall Messenger. "Our high-grade ore is about exhausted. If the industry is to continue at the pace to which Minnesota has been geared, the operators will have to turn to low-grade ore. But it would appear that the industry needs tax help and encouragement."

Garberson

INFORMED MINNESOTANS EVERYWHERE are concerned about the future of this industry. Yet it can be a very bright future if our still-abundant ores are put to the right use.

As Editor Garberson says, much of Minnesota's high-grade ore is gone. But enough remains to last a long time IF it's conserved by supplementing it with our limitless low-grade and taconite ore.

This is true conservation. But it won't be easy and it won't be cheap.

It will take king-size investments. A single taconite plant may cost $75 million. That's just the beginning. It'll cost far more to PRODUCE the lower-grade and taconite ores.

You don't just dredge them up and ship them out. You must clean and concentrate—really manufacture—them. You must mine far more ore—1½ to 4 times as much for every ton of shipping product. You need more manpower, more tools, more water, more power, more supplies.

Clearly, the manufactured ores will cost real money. Yet if they are to find a market, they must be cheap enough to compete with the new-found high-grade foreign ores—like those of Venezuela and Labrador.

If the present producers can hold down costs, this state can continue to be a major ore supplier. But part of the problem of holding down costs is holding down taxes.

Last year the iron ore industry paid over $27 million in local and state taxes. It is — by far — our most heavily taxed major industry. Indeed, no other state taxes any natural resource as heavily as Minnesota taxes iron ore.

Yes, Mr. Garberson, this industry needs "encouragement." It needs assurance that the state will treat it fairly, now and in the future.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

"I Earn Dividends 3 Ways Dealing with LAND O' LAKES"
LAND O'LAKES FEEDS

says A. R. RANUM, owner-patron, Starbuck (Minn.) Cooperative Creamery

"Here's how I figure it," says Mr. Ranum. "I'm satisfied I not only get a higher return for my butterfat, over the years, but I feel the savings in feeds and dairy equipment count as extra 'dividends'." Strong believer in quality improvement, Mr. Ranum likes the help he gets from LAND O'LAKES in that field and concludes: "Above all, dealing with LAND O'LAKES, you know you get fair treatment, every time." How about you? Do you sell milk or cream? Better sell the better way—through LAND O'LAKES.

Census Takers to Start Soon

Housewives of Marshall County will be called to their front doors during the first two weeks of April by the knock of the Census takers from the U. S. Bureau of the Census. The Census taker will present his or her credentials, in the form of an identification card introducing him or her as an enumerator for the 17 Decennial Census. He will carry an official Census of Population form on which he will write down names and note information about each inyividual in the honsehold. He will have nothing to sell and will ask only the questions which appear on the Census form.

Enumerators selected for this County are: Norman W. Hagen, Argyle; Mary C. Kiesow, Goodridge; Phyllis E. Sunsdahl, Stephen; Iva Lamberson, Warren; Hazel F. Hurtz, Warren; Ione E. Copp, Warren; Orlene C. Reed, Holt; Chester Tanberg, Newfolden; Bertram Jevne, Strathcona, Severt Engevik, Gatzke; Richard Fitzsimons, Argyle; Daniel F. Borowicz, Strandquist; Robert Hendricks, Stephen; Melvin Swanson, Oslo; Dorothy Jose, Stephen: Clifford Benson. Stephen; Leonard Haack, Grygla; Margaret McGlynn, Stephen; Norman Thieling, Grygla; Arvid Matero, Middle River.

If the visitor claims to be a Census taker but cannot produce his credentials he an imposter and will be subject to penal action for impersonating a Federal officer. If he undertakes to conduct any business other than the collection of official Census information, he betrays himself because official Census takers are subject to loss of their jobs if they combine their Census work with soliciting money, selling house-to-house, distributing advertising material, or other similar activities which bring canvassers, peddlers and the like from door to door.

Housewives who have reason to believe that they are being imposed upon by a faker are urged by George W. Anderson, local Census District Supervisor, to notify the police and give the authorities a description of the individual.

Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Bratteli were guests at the T. J. Lillevold home at Thief River Falls Saturday evening. Other guests were Mrs. Louis Olson and Lyman of McIntosh, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Anderson and Mr. and Mrs. Hjalmer Johnson of Thief River Falls.

Gay Nineties Show Monday

Way back in 1949 the program committee of the Holt Sportsmen's Club met in the club rooms to plan a program for the next meeting. From this meeting the "Gay Nineties Review" was born. Though we were not able to have the show at the next meeting, we do have it for you now. The reason we were not able to have it as we had planned was because the show grew like the proverbial bean stalk.

The Revue, as it now stands, is made up of seventeen different acts and contains a cast of approximately 60 people including actors, directors, stage hands and others.

We honestly believe that we have one of the finest shows that has ever been the privilege of the Holt Sportsmens Club to produce. All of the acts are in keeping with the times known as the Gay Nineties.

We have for you two men's quartettes, a girl's quartette, eight dancing girls, a medicine show, two pantomimes and various other attractions.

You are invited to be our guest on Monday evening, April 3rd at 8 p. m. to witness the premier showing of The Gay Nineties Revue. Admission— your Sportsmen's Club Card. Children Must be accompanied by parents.

Insurance Date Extended

Marshall county farmers have until April 15 to take out Federal All Risk Crop Insurance on their 1950 crops of wheat and flax A. E. Strandquist, chairman of the county PMA committee announced today.

The deadline for making application for crop insurance was extended 15 days in order to allow evary farmer an opportunity to protect his crop if he wishes.

The insurance is sold by representatives of the county Production and Marketing Administration. Snow and bad roads has made it difficult for the PMA agents to contact farmers in many instances before the original deadline date Authority for extension of the time allowed for selling policies was received at the county PMA office today from Charles W. Stickney, State PMA Chairman.

Marshall County is one of the few counties in the United States in which Federal Crop Insurance is offered. It insures the crop against all hazards of nature at a low premium rate. Administrative expenses of the insurance are approved by Congress.

Farmers may fill out applications for the insurance at the PMA office located in Warren, or may contact one of the insurance agents.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Johnson and son of Oakland, Calif., arrived here last week from Oakland, California for a visit with relatives.

Quit Too Soon

THE OLDEST INHABITANT had celebrated his hundredth birthday and the reporter of a local paper called on him for an interview. Having congratulated the old fellow, the reporter asked a few questions.

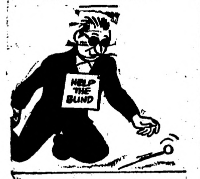
"To what do you attribute your longevity?" he inquired.

The centenarian paused a moment and then, holding up his hand and ticking off the items on his fingers, began: "I never smoked, drank alcoholic liquors, or overate, and I always rise at six in the morning."

"But," protested the reporter, "I had an uncle who acted in that way yet he only lived to be eighty. How do you account for that?"

"He didn't keep it up long enough," was the calm reply.

JUST STANDING BY



A man threw a nickel towards the blind man's cup. The coin missed and rolled along the pavement, but the man with the dark glasses quickly recovered it.

"But I thought you were blind?"

"No, I am not the regular blind man, sir," he said. "I'm just taking his place while he's at the movies."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Coal Operators Hint at Price Hike; Britain Faces New Economic Crisis; Federal Tax Reduction Poses Puzzle

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

COAL:

The 'Payoff'

The "payoff" in the recent coal strike settlement was coming more quickly than was usually the case in the settling of these disputes. The cost to the consumer of John L. Lewis' power over the operators and his union was to be felt very soon.

ANNOUNCEMENT came in the form of a statement by spokesman for the soft coal industry that there is now in preparation a 10 to 40 cents a ton increase on the price of coal.

When the United Mine Workers long strike against the industry was settled recently, operators forecast a rise in prices.

However, discussion of the price hike indicated there would be no blanket increase. Rather, the boost would vary according to the financial situation and contract commitments of individual firms.

One official was quoted as saying:

"If it (the increase) only amounts to 10 cents a ton, the retailer shoud be able to absorb it. But if it goes any higher, it will affect the price of coal to the consumer."

It seems logical that the retailer could assume an added cost of 10 cents a ton—but the question was: Would he? Except for competition, which would hardly be forthcoming in the way of a price fight, the retailer could pass on any coal price hike to the consumer.

BRITAIN:

Another Crisis

Great Britain truly had fallen on evil times. Barely escaping one financial crisis after another, the word was that the nation was facing another financial-economic crisis in 1950—just as she did in 1949 and 1948.

THE DAY had passed when Americans could say to such news: "So what—what has that got to do with us?" For the fact was that because of U.S.-British economic-financial ties stemming from the early Franklin D. Roosevelt era, whatever happened to Britain economically or financially could be expected to happen to the U.S.

The reason was that in any such crisis there was no one but the U.S. to whom the British could turn for help.

The problem, as British leaders viewed it, was that although Britain's production is about as high as it can go in the near future, it does not yield enough exportable goods to meet pressing British problems.

ONE OF THESE is the need to increase sales to the United States to earn more dollars and solve Britain's current inability to pay for the goods she must get from the United States.

Another is conflicting pressure on Britain to ship goods to other creditors as a means of paying on huge debts acquired in wartime and since.

Possible solutions included negotiations with creditors to ease pressure on old debts and —as was inevitable and expected—provisions of further loans from the United States.

TAX CUTS:

A Problem

Cynical observers of congressional tax-cut maneuvering might be forgiven a "so what?" reaction to announcement that while Democrats had thrown out President Truman's limitations on excise-tax slashes, they promised to dig up other revenue to balance the losses.

TO THE AVERAGE taxpayer that must seem to be a senseless business. What was the point in abolishing one type of taxes and levying another? Excise taxes affected almost every one in the nation, and the substitute for a slash there — tightening up of tax loopholes and "such other taxes as may be deemed feasible" — would most likely affect a majority of taxpayers.

That "other such taxes as may be deemed feasible," was the clincher that cut off any relief taxpayers might obtain through a slash in the excise levies.

President Truman has threatened to veto the excise tax cut if the loss of this revenue is not balanced by other sources. With developments as they were, it appeared certain that there would be no excise tax reductions before July 1.

Accused

Dorothy Kenyon, named by U.S. Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.) as first on the list of alleged "fellow-travelers," or Communists, in the state department, was listed as a $12,000-a-year-member of the economic and social council of the U.S. commission to the United Nations.

ACHESON:

Rapped Again

Tall, debonair, Dean Acheson, U.S. secretary of state, was under fire again. He was charged, among other accusations, with trying to "shift the blame" in defending the alleged loyalty-suspect cases Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.) has been airing on capitol hill.

SINCE ACHESON made his now-famous remark that "I will not turn my back on Alger Hiss," following the latter's conviction of perjury in question with treason charges, Acheson has been more or less on the pan as accusers of the state department deliver their verbal blasts.

This time, McCarthy charged three key state department aides as having shown Communist sympathies and demanded investigation of a navy civilian scientist whom he described as working on "top-most defense secrets."

The charge that the state department harbors men and women of Communist leanings or sympathies is not a new one. It has been cropping up for the past several years, and on each occasion the department indignantly rushes forth with a denial.

THAT'S NOT SURPRISING for certainly neither Senator McCarthy nor anyone else expected the state department would admit such a condition existed, even if it did exist. To do so would admit either a lack of proper security efforts on the part of the department, or a willingness to wink at any employee's loyalty if that employee happened to "stand in right" with the proper officials.

ATTLEE:

Doing Okay

To the surprise of most observers, England's so-called "shaky" Labor government had survived two major tests of strength in parliament.

FOLLOWING the election, in which Prime Minister Attlee's Labor party won a bare majority of parliament seats, it was predicted that the victory margin was so slight that the government might crumble—that a new election was practically inevitable.

In the recent test—action on a Conservative motion to beat down the cabinet's housing program—Attlee made a considerably stronger showing than on a previous issue.

THE LABOR VICTORY was made possible by support from the Liberal faction, a development at odds with popular speculation as to where the Liberals would go in parliamentary tests. Many top political observers had predicted that the Liberals would stand with the Conservatives against Attlee's broad program of nationalization-of-industry-and-resources, but closer observers of the British political scene had pooh-poohed the idea that the Liberals would ever be found standing with the Conservatives. And, apparently, these prognosticators were correct.

While it had appeared that the Labor forces were to trim down their nationalization program because of the close election result, these new victories might reshape the pattern of intent. For example, following triumph on the housing issue, Health Minister Bevan, whose ministry administers the housing program, declared . . . "the government's program will be persisted in."

TRUMAN:

Costly Figure

Republicans, sniping at President Truman, declared that he, as a private citizen, "is one of the best, if not the best paid man in the world today."

Figures lending themselves to many artifices, the gentleman issuing that statement, Rep. Roy O. Woodruff of Michigan figured it out this way:

A PRIVATE CITIZEN to match the standard of living now enjoyed by the President would need an income of three to three and a half million dollars a year.

Mr. Truman has take-home pay of $110,000 a year out of his salary, $50,000 of which is tax-free.

He has 42 facilities for travel, including 35 automobiles, airplanes, his own yacht, the Williamsburg, a private Pullman car and "vacation retreats" in Key West, Fla., and Maryland.

He has an estimated stall of 665 persons at an annual cost of $1,491,540. He has a travel allowance of $33,000 to $40,000.

Then Representative Woodruff listed the costs of the yacht, the President's personal plane, his private railroad car, a destroyer escort for the yacht, secret service and White House guards, White House salary costs for a staff of 225.

THEN said Representative Woodruff: "By comparison, President Roosevelt in 1945 had a staff of 53 costing only $256,431 and President Hoover's staff totaled 37 at a salary bill of $127,200. Present White House salary costs, he said, amount to $998,254 annually.

That was an impressive list of conveniences and privileges and special help, certainly; rivaling in many instances the best that an Indian Potentate could boast. Yet, democracy comes high, and there was little likelihood that a resume of what the presidency costs the people would raise the blood pressure of many American taxpayers.

ELECTIONS:

Certainty & Doubt

A graphic contrast between choices by electorates in Communist and other countries was provided in the Russian and Belgian elections. In Russia, there was no choice.

Premier Stalin was the Number 1 candidate of the Soviets, and he had no opposition. As head of the Communist ticket, he was shooting for as nearly 100 per cent of the vote as possible—with no "No" votes to come.

Stalin and associates campaigned on a pledge of following a policy of peace. The Russians elected a new parliament of 1,302 members.

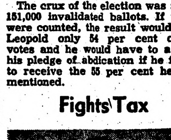
IN BELGIUM the situation was quite different. The issue was: Should King Leopold III be returned to the throne? Fifty-seven per cent of the voters said he should, a fact which must have been comforting to Leopold, inasmuch as he had vowed to abdicate unless he received 55 per cent of the vote.

However, the victory at the polls didn't mean Leopold was back on the throne. Parliament would have the last word, as the election was only advisory—being designed to show parliament how the people felt about Leopold. The election was tumultuous, with rioting and fighting marking the balloting.

LEOPOLD had drawn the ill will of millions of Belgians because of his capitulation to the Germans in World War II, although his supporters pointed out there was little else he could have done.

The crux of the election was some 151,000 invalidated ballots. If these were counted, the result would give Leopold only 54 per cent of the votes and he would have to act on his pledge of abdication if he failed to receive the 55 per cent he had mentioned.

Fights Tax



Fred N. Acker, Cleveland, Ohio, attorney, is testing the validity of present federal income tax schedules which he declares are "confiscatory." Acker admitted he had not filed any return or paid any direct taxes for several years, and "invited the government charge."

CURVES:

In or Out?

The matter of whether milady's curves were to be played down or accentuated in this spring's fashions was a subject of no little controversy among designers.

One school of thought wanted curves concealed—The other would have them displayed to the best advantage. The subject was important to the American male who, in the end, would be most concerned because he would pay for most of it.

QUICK COFFEE

Glass Stove Perks Water in 50 Seconds

Among many other important things connected with coffee-making is speed of operation, with most users always casting about for methods to hasten the process.

Now, a new glass is a transparent stove that heats air or boils water for coffee—and it will start water perking inside 50 seconds. The glass has a transparent skin that conducts electricity, but resists enough to make the glass hot, up to 600 degrees Fahrenheit. The skin is a metallic oxide only about sixteen millionths of an inch thick.

This bit of glass magic is the latest development of Corning glass works. It is called E-C glass, meaning electrically conducting. Heaters made of flat panels of this glass are being used to keep baby chicks warm, among other things.

Household Hints

Odds and ends of fruit juices that clutter your refrigerator, especially orange and pineapple, can make a delicious combination. Simply stew prunes or apricots in the mixture.

Apples can be baked without cracking and every bit of flavor retained if a one-inch band is peeled from the middle of each apple. Stuff the apple and bake in a moderate oven.

Orange juice can be fixed in half the usual time. The trick is to squeeze small oranges by cutting off the stem end only and extracting the juice in one operation. It works for lemons, too.

Salty soup is no cause for alarm. Add a sliced raw potato or two and simmer slowly five to 10 minutes. Remove the potato slices before serving the soup.

There are seven ways of preparing eggs: cooking in the shell, frying, poaching, scrambling, baking, broiling, and in omelets.

Watch It!

Your watch got its name from the fact that the first portable timepieces, cumbersome devices made of iron and shaped like a huge egg, were carried by town criers or "watchmen" on their nightly rounds.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he revisits familiar places, he remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He recalls the bad bargain Neighbor Delinsky, the "foreigner," made with gypsy horse-traders and how Newt rectified his neighbor's mistake. He remembers attending the school debates, the spelling bees, the ciphering matches held in the chautauqua tent. Then he recalled when he and Harlan first talked about "going" with city girls. . . .

CHAPTER XI

One day as Harlan and I were out cutting hedge we began to talk about hat tipping. City men were doing this all the time; and so were city boys. But no farmer in the world ever yanked his hat off just because he met a woman. And no farm boy ever swooped off his hat just because he met a neighbor girl. She would have thought he was daft.

Harlan said, "Let's tip our hats to a girl."

Harlan had a great deal more confidence and self-assurance than I had. He was the "sport" of the neighborhood.

"Do you mean to one of the girls around here?"

"I mean," said Harlan firmly, "to a city girl."

The idea was so exciting that we had to stop and sit down and rest. There we sat, with the long sharp blades of our knives covered with sticky juice from the hedge sprouts, talking it over.

"Do you think we'd dare?" I asked.

"Of course we can." Harlan made it seem nothing at all.

"Suppose she snubs us?"

"She won't snub us," said Harlan.

I looked at him admiringly, wishing I had his confidence and his dash. "Suppose we don't see a girl we know, what then?"

"We'll keep on till we do," said undefeatable Harlan.

We got the jug out of the shade and swigged down a drink. Pretty soon the knives were slashing again. Harlan worked on one side of the hedge and I worked on the other. The fallen sprouts made two green paths. As we slashed we talked back and forth.

"If she snubs us, people will see and laugh," I said.

"She won't snub us," said Harlan.

We decided to go to town Saturday and try the idea. We met dressed up, but were not quite so confident. There was a vast difference between talking a thing over along a hedge fence and being in town with the right thing on us.

"We could walk past the jail," I said. Country people liked to walk past the jail and see desperate criminals looking out the windows.

"We're goin' to hunt up a girl an' tip," said Harlan, the slave driver.

City folks walked on the west of the square; farmers walked on the other side of the street, next to the horses. We made for this side of the street, me hoping to God there wouldn't be a city girl on the farmer side. There we walked, our hearts thumping and us feeling that everybody in town was watching.

Plenty of farm girls; we spoke but we didn't tip. I began to wish to heaven we had never got into it. "Harlan," I said, "let's put it off till sometime when there're not so many people around."

"We said we would and we're goin' to," announced Harlan.

We marched back again, me peering ahead and hoping no city girl would be on this side.

Thank God! there wasn't. Maybe Harlan would weaken. But he did not weaken.

"Let's go on the other side and try it there," he said.

Among all the city people who already seemed to be staring at us! I would as soon have walked on coals.

Our Courage Comes to the Fore

City people here, talking of things we knew nothing about. Harlan and I walked briskly among them. And then we saw coming toward us a city girl—Grace Langan who worked at the library. How pretty she looked, how fashionable. Inferiority laid hold of me and a sudden desire not to be seen by her gripped me. I wanted to edge over to a store window and pretend I had suddenly discovered something overwhelmingly interesting. But Harlan would not let me and we plunged straight toward this exquisite creature. A craven thought came to me; maybe I could discover that one of my shoes had become unlaced and make a dive at it. She came closer, she saw us, and then—oh, then—she smiled and spoke. For one terrified moment I stared at her, paralyzed; then my hand shot up and snatched my hat off and I murmured, "Howdy-do."

We walked on, still trembling a little. But we had done it! Actually gone through with it exactly as we had said we would.

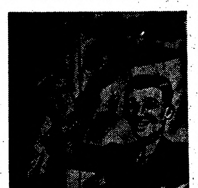
For some time after this, I was still self-conscious when I met a city girl, but I always managed to get my hat off.

One evening, as Newt was getting ready to go out to chore, he saw somebody coming down the road. The highway in front of the house was a kind of motion picture. People moved along it, they disappeared from sight; others came into view. When a member of the family saw someone, he always let the others know. Then, one and all, the whole family would go to the window and look down the road. Who would be first to identify the rig? or spot the person?

Sometimes the person would stop and call out the news. Sometimes Newt would go out to the rig, rest one foot on the hub and stand there talking. When the man drove on, Newt would come back and tell the family the news. The family couldn't have got along without their road which brought them so much pleasure. The road, the base-burner, the ice cream freezer, the dinner bell with its sweet sound—how much satisfaction these brought to farm life.

Movers were not of as much interest as neighbors, for we would never see them again. Nobody ever waved at movers. And movers never waved at anybody. They just plodded past. They didn't own land; they were not important.

Sometimes renters passed. That was different. They did not have canvas-covered wagons; they had their household plunder in open-topped wagons and were merely moving from one farm to another. They did not own land, but they were treated with respect. Some day they might own land and be important.



For one terrified moment I stared at her, paralyzed; then my hand shot up and snatched my hat off, and I murmured "Howdy-do."

It's the Daveys, Nebraska-Bound

This was a covered wagon. As it came closer it was to be seen that the top was bright and new; and the canvas was not sagged between the bows.

"They've got a nice stepping pair," allowed Newt.

It was indeed true; the horses were moving along at a lively clip.

Then, to the amazement of the Kennedy family, the man waved. Now and then some eccentric would do this. But a farm family would hardly wave back. Must not be too free and easy with shiftless unknowns.

"They're all waving!" said Mrs. Kennedy.

That certainly was true, for the woman was waving and two or three children were fluttering their hands excitedly.

"Maybe something's the matter."

But as the mysterious family came closer, it was seen they were merely having a good time.

The man cupped his hands. "Hello there!"

Newt waved, but not too heartily; they were still movers.

"Why!" it's those people," said Newt. And it exactly was; out they piled and came hurrying toward the house, leaving the wagon standing in the road. In a moment everybody was shaking hands and talking excitedly; in fact all talking at once.

Mrs. Davey displayed a little girl. "Here she is!" she said proudly.

Mrs. Kennedy took the child into her arms, deeply stirred. "The darling!" she said—Mrs. Kennedy who was not one to show her emotions easily. And now as the family got straightened out on the porch, she could hardly take her eyes off the child. She said such things as "I think she's just darling," "I like her so much," "Are you going to give her to me?"

Mrs. Davey beamed. "I guess we'd better keep her."

After the first excitement of reunion, Tom Davey said, "Come and see my outfit."

It was indeed a fine outfit; two teams—one on the pole and one behind. A turning-plow was iron-strapped under the wagon; the wagon itself was overflowing with furniture and household equipment; and on the back was an immense chicken coop.

"Not bad, eh?" said Tom Davey proudly.

"You've got a good layout," said Newt.

"I'm goin' to pick me up a cow somewhere in Nebraska. I'm travelin' too fast now."

Tom told how he was able to have such a good outfit. In Illinois he had cropped some land, made some money, and had bought a brand-new wagon, new teams and was now going back. Pausing, he moved self-consciously. "Also the woman came by some money." The awkward moment was over. "Goin' to the Little Big Horn! A friend out there has been writin' me; the finest cheap land layin' outdoors, lots of natural water, no hardpan to speak of. I'm west of the alkali. I'm going to get me a couple of sections and build up as fine a farm as you'd want to rest your optics on."

"Tom's got big plans," said Mrs. Davey.

"I shore have. An' I'll carry 'em out this time, too."

Grandpa looked at the wagon carefully, especially the felloes and brake blocks. "We never had a wagon as good as that," he confessed. "We had oxen, double-teamed on hills and acrost river beds. A light wagon like yourn wouldn't offer any problem a-tall."

They stayed all night, but this time they slept in the spare bedroom; the children were scattered over the house and kept jumping up and down to get a drink. But that was all right; the Kennedys were glad to have the Daveys. In a way, they were old friends.

They all felt a tug of sadness when it came time, the next morning, for the wagon to start. The whole Kennedy family stood around the still brightly painted, hardly warped wagon.

"If we make a go of it, we'd like to have you come out and see us," said Mrs. Davey.

"We'll make a go of it all right!" said Tom Davey. "You'll see. I'm goin' to have me a big fine two-barn farm."

He took off the brake; the block fell away from the wheel. The horses, hearing the preparations, tossed their ears and switched their tails."

"Wave good-by, Ellen," said Mrs. Davey.

The little girl fluttered a hand.

Changes were taking place. As a result of the King road-drag and the four-horse grader, a road was passable in almost no time at all after a rain. The roadbed was arched and shoulder-sloped. Soon our buggies and wagons and hacks were out again. Our farmers said, "Thank God for D. Ward King!" and meant it too. But wonderful as the road-drag was, it also brought troubles—cars. (We no longer called them automobiles.) No one could go to town without having two or three of the cursed things snorting and roaring past. But—thank God!—our horses didn't shake as much as they used to.

With the coming of good roads, we went on longer trips to see our kinfolks. Not merely into the next county, but sometimes two or three counties away. We would stop at farmers' houses and stay overnight. The next morning there was the ceremony of trying to pay. When our satchels were in and the horses hitched we would say, "Well, how much do we owe you for the night's accommodation?" We always knew what the farmer would answer, unless he was a tightwad.

"Nothing a-tall. Glad to have the pleasure of your society."

As we drove away, the farmer and his wife would stand watching us wistfully.

But we didn't go to the cities; we didn't feel at home in them and we knew that the city people looked down on us.

Better Roads Bring Prosperity

Better roads were changing our community ways. Spelling bees, ciphering matches and debates in the schoolhouses were hardly ever held any more. About the only time there was a gathering was on the last day of school, or when there was a box supper to raise money for somebody who had been cycloned out. But we still went to the churches. Cove oyster suppers, strawberry festivals, picnics. But the camp meeting was passing out. Hardly anybody ever rented a tent, stayed a week and joined the praying teams; we no longer heard about the number of souls that had been saved or about the great baptizings when the spirit of God had been present. People attended, but usually only for a day; sometimes they didn't even stay for the lamp-and-lantern service. They would have a fried chicken supper furnished for a quarter by the sisters of the church, then start home. It was very discouraging to the preachers. Sometimes "workers" would go out to the buggies and ask the people to stay. Some of the farmers would crawl shamefacedly out, but few of them were converted.

Our people were growing prosperous. We no longer ate cheese and crackers in the back end of the grocery, but went to the short order. But we didn't quite go to the Linville Hotel. We felt out of place there, among the city people, with the fine tablecloths and with napkins folded up and sticking fashionably in the drinking glasses. But we had our farms; we owned land.

GRASSROOTS

by WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

One Way to Peace

GEORGE F. KENNAN, counseler of the American state department, in an article in the March issue of the Readers' Digest, says the Stalinist doctrine does not demand war to establish world communism, as did the Lenin doctrine.

The role of the Communists in each capitalistic country following the party line is to hasten the collapse of capitalism, but that is not to be accomplished by the employment of the Red army. In fact, it is the belief of Communists, including Stalin, that capitalism will fall of its own weight and that war is not needed to achieve that end.

If that is true, we could avoid war with Russia by turning from our capitalistic, private enterprise system to Russian communism. It is possible that our turn to the left to follow the socialist and communistic road represents the foreign policy of the American government? It could be that such a course is planned as a means of avoiding war with Russia. If so, it is a terrific price we propose to pay. It would mean exchanging our liberties and our opportunities for a peace treaty.

The British Labor government has taken England well along the road to communism. Had the recent election resulted in the decisive victory Labor party leaders hoped for and expected, the Labor government would undoubtedly have completed the swing from capitalism to communism.

But with a majority of the English voters having repudiated socialism and the Labor party having but a bare majority in Parliament, the Labor government will hardly dare risk a "confidence" vote over any additional socialistic legislation. Should that not prove true, we will have lost England as an ally in any conflict that might come with Russia, and that would mean a most serious loss for the cause of capitalism.

In this article, Kennan did not say, or did not intimate that our foreign policy was responsible for our trend toward communism, which quite naturally he would not do for political reasons, but the tendencies of state department officials toward communism and the objection on the part of the department to any and all investigations by congress of the department, or of individuals with presumed communist leanings, would seem to indicate that we are considering the concession to the demands of Russia.

The American people were not given an opportunity to express their wishes regarding our turn to the welfare state and to socialism, and it is not to be expected that any decision as to communism and the dictatorship of the proletariat, that is a vital part of communism, would be left to the people to decide. Making such decisions is a part of national planning that is accepted as the privilege of a dictator.

Surpluses have been the bogeyman of the farmer for the last 20 years, since shortly after the close of World War I, when Europe quit buying much of our agricultural production.

During the last 20 years, congress has attempted to find a solution of the farm problem, that is the problem of low prices caused by over-production. The only solution that has been found is that of buying up the surplus with the taxpayer's money, so as to force the consumer to pay more for the food he eats. Nothing in the way of a permanent solution has been found or attempted.

At long last congress seems to realize that something more than spending the taxpayers' dollar for the purpose of maintaining big food prices for the consumers is needed, if the farm problem is to be permanently solved.

It may be markets through which to feed the hungry millions of Europe and Asia, or it may be scientific research to provide more uses for farm products, and possibly different farm products. The five urban votes to the one on the farm are threatening revolt, and congress has taken heed. They will not continue to maintain high food prices by spending the taxpayers' money.

* * *

Though the British Labor party elected a bare majority of its candidates for parliament, a majority of all the English voters repudiated its socialistic program. With so small a majority in parliament, only seven, it is hardly possible that any further socialistic advances will be attempted. If they are, they could easily result in a "no confidence" vote that would mean loss of power for the party, and new elections, with the probability of a Conservative victory and the return of Churchill.

"Ya' say ya' wanta buy some kilowatts? Ya' say ya' wanta get 'em cheap? Tell ya' what I'm gonna do . . . "

If kilowatts could be sold on a street corner, a carnival "pitchman" would sell them. And at an amazingly low price, too! But kilowatts just can't be handled that way. They have to be manufactured, delivered, and used -- all at the same time!

And they're CHEAPER by the MILLION!

Mass production is the father of low-cost electricity. And it's only mass production that enables an independent electric company such as Otter Tail to bring a community light and power more economically than a city-owned plant. Beware of the "pitchman's" chatter!

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

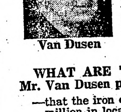
Shall we kill Minnesota's golden goose?

"Because of the importance of the iron ore industry to the entire state, it is well to review its tax status," comments H. A. Van Dusen, publisher of the Bovey Press. "When the ore is gone, there will be no more. It is proper, therefore, that we profit as much as possible by its removal. But isn't there a danger, when we have a Golden Goose, of killing the goose prematurely so there will be no more Golden Eggs?"



Van Dusen

WHAT ARE THE FACTS about the danger Mr. Van Dusen points out? It's a fact——that the iron ore industry last year paid over $27 million in local and state taxes;

—that it is taxed at a higher rate than any other major Minnesota industry;

—that no state taxes any natural resource as heavily as this state taxes iron ore.

That's some load for an industry to shoulder. Especially when that industry now faces the knotty, costly problem of developing new types of ores.

It's no secret that much of the ready-to-ship ore of the Mesabi is gone. If the state is to keep its leadership in production of ore, the remaining high-grade ore must be conserved. How? By supplementing it with our low-grade and taconite ores.

Minnesota has plenty of lower-quality ores—billions of tons. But it will cost plenty to develop them—hundreds of millions of dollars.

One producer, for example, is spending from $17 to $20 million to learn how to process taconite on a commercial scale. Building a taconite plant will cost far more. Running it, still more. For producing low-grade ores is no simple mining matter: it's a major MANUFACTURING operation.

Naturally the costs of producing low-grade ores must be covered by the selling price. Yet this price must be low enough to compete with the newly discovered high-grade ores of Labrador and Venezuela—or it won't sell.

It's easy to see that high ore taxes mean high ore costs—and less demand for our ore. High taxes might not kill our "golden goose," but they won't encourage her to lay more golden eggs.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that.

Forests Renewable

A forest is not like a mine or an oil well. It does not consist of just so must material, which when taken away is gone forever. It is a replaceable resource. Forests are living, reproducing things. A forest that is not used is only a kind of storehouse. But with proper use, it becomes a sort of factory, constantly growing new supplies of wood.

Sunday afternoon a snowstorm hit here that stopped all traffic on the highway. The storm lasted through Monday. Many local residents who had gone out of town, did not get back until Monday or Tuesday.

"Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight"

Our ten o'clock curfew lasted for 50 years, but the town council voted it out. I dropped in at the meeting in Town Hall last week just in time to hear Smiley Roberts.

"The curfew is old-fashioned," says Smiley. "We ought to be grown-up enough by now to behave like grownups. Seeing to it that our kids get to bed is the responsibility of each family." Then Judge Cunningham adds, "Most of us are in bed when the curfew horn blows anyway. It wakes me up just when I'm getting to sleep!"

What the Judge said was good for a laugh, but Smiley just about summed up how folks think in this town. We believe that the democratic tradition of "live and let live" is the only way to live.

From where I sit, it's not the American way to regulate your life by a horn—anymore than it's right to criticize my caring for a temperate glass of beer now and then. Think what you wish, say what you wish, but don't ask your neighbor to do exactly as you do!

Urbrn Streets Dangerous

Pedestrian hazards differ widely in rural and urban areas, according to the Minnesota Highway Departments summary of motor vehicle traffic accidents reported in 1949. Urban streets took a heavy toll of children and old folks.

Twenty children under 10 were killed on roads and streets within city and village limits, and only one on a rural road.

Of the 75 pedestrian victims who were 55 years of age or older, 58 were killed in the cities and villages, and 17 on rural roads.

A number of rural victims listed as pedestrians were hit while changing tires, pushing or working on stalled cars, watching others work, or walking to summon aid. Most of the accidents occured at night, and obscured tail lights were a factor in several cases.

The Spirit of Research

What has happened to the half-starved genius who used to toil in some lonely attic, hoping to invent the wonder of the age? His day is just about over. There are not so many of these lone-wolf inventors as there were in grandpa's time. Don't we give patents any more? It isn't that. America is still the land of liberty and opportunity. A man can still build his gadget and risk his shirt in hope of making his first million. Some do. That spirit remains.

The Newer Way

But better ways have been found. The newer term "research" is gradually replacing the older term "invention." Our complex age has made specialization necessary, and this has been true of invention, or product development. To solve the problems of the day, the new way is to bring together many different minds, each highly trained in its own way. Industry is doing just this, and we call it research.

The spirit of the attic inventor is there, but the tools and the methods are different. While the half-starved inventor struggled along with almost no financial backing, the modern research team requires and uses vast amounts of money.

Gets Customers

Now, I wonder if Joe Doe, member of Local 382, understands why his company put down in its 1947 annual report: for Research and Development, $2,000,000. In round figures, that was the sum spent last year by a company that employs about 8,000 persons. Some companies spend more. One of the firms that manufacture rayon reports that it has spent more than $30,000,000 since it became interested in that product.

True, it may seem like a lot of money your company is spending for research, Joe. But remember this: research money comes right back to you in a thousand ways. Actually, the company that does not spend for research, for better ways of producing better products, is a company that will lose out and close down in the long run. A more enterprising competitor will wind up with the consumer's dollar!

Spirit of America

The company that spends for research is the company that I would want to work for. It is also the company whose stock I'd be willing to buy. I am convinced that when many industries are putting large sums of money into research, to find the answers to problems that face them and the consumer, that money is well spent. Years of time and millions of dollars may be behind a new product. But it may be worth far more. Many a new job and a much better product may be the result.

I mentioned rayon. Nowadays, nylon is newer. The DuPont Company spent 11 years of research before they could even announce nylon, and used up $11,000,000 before a penny was earned from the product. That kind of thing can happen only in America, and under free enterprise. The freedom to venture and to look for the better way of doing things, for the newer and better product, belongs to the spirit of America, and it is responsible for our high wages and our high standard of living.

Gay Nineties Show Huge Success

The young members of the Holt Sportsmen's Club put on a musical show, "The Gay Nineties" for the entertainment of membres of the club on Monday evening at the Holt school house. A large crowd was present. The show was such a huge success that they were immediately asked to show it at Newfolden and Grygla. The singing, acting, dancing girls, comedians, and costuming were so astoundingly wonderful it could be classed with any professional group. It is by far the best home talent program ever produced in Holt.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he revisits familiar places, he remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their children, Ida, Lucy and Harlan. He recalls the courage it took the first time he and Harlan tipped their hats to a city girl. He remembers the adventuresome Tom Daveys and their quest for cheap land in the Little Big Horn. He remembers the D. Ward King road-drag and the four-horse grader that made roads passable after a rain and helped bring greater prosperity to the farmers—and closer relationships with city folks. . . .

CHAPTER XII

Meantime, Ida and Lucy were getting older; Harlan was "growing up." Ida continued to have many beaus. Now and then she was late getting home at night; her parents worried, then. Sometimes they wished she were dependable, like Lucy. But Ida was the laughing, the gay one who always had a good time. Newt's hitch rack was growing more and more gnawed.

Sometimes Mrs. Kennedy wanted to move from the farm. Life was too hard, she said. It was hard, there was no doubt of it; but it was the only kind of life we knew anything about. And always—above and beyond anything else—we had the land. Nothing could take that from us . . . yet sometimes farmers borrowed money from eastern insurance companies and the insurance companies did take the land.

Now, with better roads, something was growing tremendously important; and this was the Harvest Home, the Pumpkin Show, the Street Fair, the Pure Bred Show, the Short Horn Show. Sometimes it had one name, sometimes another. People in our town got so they dreaded to have the show come, for every relative in twenty miles swooped down. Sometimes our town people developed "feeling poorly" spells; usually they got over them about the time the fair closed.

It was at this particular time that arrangements were made to have our annual autumn show; it was to be called the Corn Carnival. Streets would be roped off, there would be float parades, band concerts, there would be Pioneer Day, and there would be the Midway; this was where the "concessions" were; all of us boys hoped there would be some "bad" ones. Usually we could depend on one or two.

Always, at all fairs, there was a prize for the best ear of field corn.

It was an outstanding honor to be the one who brought in the best ear. Usually there was no money prize; just the honor. But a fine, full honor it was; it suddenly lifted a man out of obscurity and made him important in the county. When he came to town on Saturday, people talked to him with respect and admiration. Raising a prize ear was not wholly due to the man's being a good farmer. Luck was an exceedingly important factor, for a prize ear was a matter of chance as much as anything. Nature might, for some unaccountable reason, produce a perfect ear. No one knew why; the ear simply was and that was the end of it. But there were always ways to increase the chance to get a good ear. One was to plant on an old rooted straw pile; then thin the stalks and pull the suckers. But this could not be depended on; for if it could be, a hundred men would have show ears. A rotted straw pile, thinning and suckering was a start only.

This year there was to be a very fine prize, indeed. Corwin's had offered a suit of clothes.

The search for the best ear began with corn shucking, a year before the prize was to be given; each farmer kept a gunny sack in the front end of his wagon and when he found a good ear, he opened up the sack and put it in. When the corn was cribbed, he would look at his would-be prize ears to see if he had one good enough to enter. But hardly ever was there one.

Newt Worries About Competition

The men put their hoped-for prize winners away and kept them secret. Sometimes, when a farmer had what he thought might be a winner, he would not mention it even to his next door neighbor—the man he had swapped work with all the year. For that man might have an entry, too, and maybe by not talking about it, he could cut down competition.

This year Newt found the best ear he had ever raised; it was large and well filled; the rows were straight and symmetrical and the grains came down to the point.

When the Carnival announcement was made, Newt was delighted. It would have been an honor to walk off with just the blue ribbon; now also there was to be a suit of clothes!

But he mustn't be too hopeful. You could never tell what might turn up.

Preparations were begun for the Corn Carnival. Three cars containing committee members went to the next county to put up posters and make good-will speeches. One car broke down. The uniformed band tooted away night after night in IOOF Hall. The churches began to compete as to which one could build the finest float. Relatives began to write in that they would be able to come.

As tagging day approached, Newt became apprehensive. Maybe he'd been too confident. "I understand there's some ears comin' in from the 102 Bottom."

"You needn't worry," Mrs. Kennedy told him. "You've got an almost perfect ear and I know you'll get that suit."

"I sure would like to walk around in that suit," said Newt.

"Don't be too sure," said Grandpa. "You can't count on anything in this world." Each year Grandpa was growing a little more pessimistic; and a little more tired.

Then suddenly and unexpectedly and dramatically — something happened. Delinsky came by the steer pasture short cut, stooped under the barbed wire and in a few minutes was up to the hollylocks.

"Hello, Anton!" Newt called out.

Delinsky Wins Himself a Suit

Everybody gathered around, for he was so strange and so different we couldn't keep our eyes off him. But he wasn't as strange and outlandish as he had been at the Welcome Party. He was getting to be a pretty fair farmer. When he got stuck with farm problems and didn't know what to do, he would ask Newt's advice. And Newt would tell him as best he could. "We've got to help new people just learnin' our ways," he would say.

Delinsky had an embarrassing, foreign way of asking personal questions no American would dream of asking. Nothing was sacred.

On the way he had passed Newt's new go-devil. "How mooch pay?"

Finally his eyes came to rest on Ida. "When she ge. a man?"

Newt told him, for it was all right to ask a question like that.

He sniffed. "What cook?"

"I'm baking corn bread," said Mrs. Kennedy.

He nodded understandingly. His black shining eyes went from one to another of us like crows flying from post to post. Finally his eyes came to rest on Ida. "When she gets a man?"

There was an embarrassed silence; sometimes Delinsky was entirely too frank and personal.

Ida laughed. "I don't know, Mr. Delinsky. You've got to help me!"

Delinsky laughed, too. "Sometimes when have too many, don't get none." His eyes flew to Lucy. "Not good looks like sister. But prob'ly get man first."

Grandpa, always eager for the excitement of company, came slowly out and lowered himself on the edge of the porch. Then gave a little sigh. Delinsky watched him. For a moment it seemed as if he were going to say that Grandpa was not long for this world, but he didn't. He turned slowly and mysteriously around, exhibiting his queer Russian clothes. "See zis. Mebbe have new American suit soon."

"When are you going to get your new raiment, Anton?" asked Newt.

He was puzzled for a moment by the fancy word. "Corns Carnival."

"You're going to blow yourself, are you?"

Delinsky shook his whiskers. At least, it seemed that way. "No. I got him here." He slapped his hip pocket.

That didn't make sense. Sometimes Delinsky didn't quite understand our words.

"How do you mean you've got it here, Anton?"

Delinsky's hand flew to his pocket and pulled out his wife's stocking. Then his hand dived into the stocking and carefully—almost tenderly—began to extract an ear. "My new American suit!"

Newt looked at it curiously. Then saw it was an exceptionally fine ear. Delinsky hadn't even seen it when he had gathered his corn and hadn't put it in a gunny sack and kept it; he had only found it when he was feeding out.

"See your ear?" asked Delinsky.

Ordinarily this was not done, but Delinsky was so eager, so tremendously pleased with his ear that Newt went in and brought his own out. Mr. Delinsky's face fell. "Yah, iss goot."

Taking the two ears into his hands, he looked from one ear to the other; hope came and went in his face. "Iss goot," he repeated.

Newt's experienced eye could evaluate show points that Delinsky could not see; Newt's was better filled, the grains plumper, the color better and the cob smaller.

Delinsky was like a father seeing his own child as superior. "Yah, goot ear," he said, handing Newt's back; he gazed proudly at his own. "Vary goot."

Time to go. The doubt that Delinsky had had was gone. He wrapped his ear in the stocking and put it into his pocket. "My new American suit!" He gave the pocket a thump.

"Good luck, Anton. Next to me, I hope you win."

"Yah! Yah!" laughed Delinsky, now in a fine mood. "Hope you win, next to me." He started jauntily back by the short cut.

The opening of the Corn Festival came. Flags and bunting everywhere; the uniformed band tooted away as hard as it could; and so did the Midway. People walked up and down the roped-off streets — the farmers who had to work so hard—their wives and children.

It was Ida's day. She seemed to be everywhere—gay, laughing, susceptible Ida. She blew squawkers and threw confetti in boys' faces. Today was a day of fun and she was having it. And so was Lucy, but not in Ida's carefree, trusting way.

One section of the courthouse yard had a platform and on the platform were easy seats and hot coffee. A sign said: RESERVED FOR OUR PIONEERS, and there Grandpa sat proudly, visiting with old friends, talking of covered-wagon days. He would ask about first one person then another. Sometimes, as the other answered, there would be a catch in the man's voice: "He passed away last winter." Then a silence.

Almost the first thing the men did—and the families, too, for that matter—was to go to the tent that had been set aside for the corn exhibits—Corn Hall, a banner said. Up and down past the tables the people walked, stopping to look at the exhibits. On each ear was a tag with the name and address of the man who had entered the ear. As Newt walked down the aisle he met Delinsky who led him proudly to his own ear. "Iss goot!"

So thrilled, so self-absorbed was Delinsky that he did not seem to think of Newt. Finally he turned. "Where yours?"

"I had a bit of bad luck, Anton. One night I forgot it and left it out on the kitchen porch and the chickens came up and pecked off some of the grains."

Instantly Delinsky's peculiarly sensitive face was filled with sympathy. And yet, secretly, was he a little glad? . . .

During the judging the people were kept out, then the tent was opened and they rushed in. Almost the fastest of all was Delinsky. There it was—just as he had hoped—the blue ribbon and, in a little envelope, was the order for the suit. He was overjoyed and so was Mrs. Delinsky and so were the children.

Newt took him by the hand. I'm sure Newt's heart was thumping almost as excitedly as Delinsky's.

"That's fine, Anton! You're going to make a real farmer yet."

And then, with his wife and children and a little crowd following, Delinsky marched to the clothing store, a suit was picked out and he stepped into the change booth and drew the curtains. When he came out he beamed at himself in the mirror.

Medicine Show Comes to Town

Yes, changes were taking place. One was in what we called "doctoring." It had been a long time since Newt had vaccinated the neighbor children. When we had a smallpox scare now, the children were picked up and rushed to town. An outstanding change was in the way we got our medicine; and our doctors, too, for that matter.

Once all our medicine had come over the counter. When anyone "complained," he drove to town and described the trouble to the druggist. For stomach trouble, the druggist looked along the shelves till he found the patent medicine for stomach trouble. For rheumatism pains, the druggist got down a bottle good for rheumatism. If it was cough trouble, the druggist got down a bottle for that.

That was passing, too, and in its place had come the doctor who sold his medicine from a landau. He wore a tall hat, had a fancy vest and a tremendous gold watch chain. Before he sold his medicine, he put on an "entertainment." He had a dumb colored man who played a guitar and sang funny songs. Just as the colored man started to sing, the doctor would look at the people and say, "Sam, there are women in the audience. Sing that song low." That brought us in closer.

When the colored man finished, he and the doctor would spar back and forth. The colored man was so dumb he couldn't understand anything. Finally the colored man would get the better of the doctor and we would laugh delightedly.

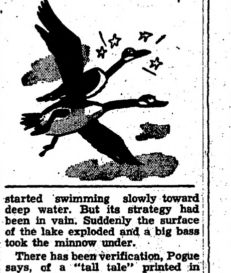
SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Instinct or Reason?

Ralph Pogue, of the Missouri conservation commission relates these stories which stir speculation as to whether creatures of the wild are able to reason, or depend entirely upon instinct:

While fishing on Lake Norfolk last summer, Frank Watts and Summerfield Jones, of West Plains, Mo., claims to have witnessed a minnow play dead in order to evade a pursuing bass. The fishermen first noticed the minnow skipping wildly through the water, but when it reached the shallow edge of the bank, it turned upon its side, evidently playing dead. After a few minutes, apparently assuming danger was past, it turned upright and started swimming slowly toward deep water. But its strategy had been in vain. Suddenly the surface of the lake exploded and a big bass took the minnow under.



There has been verification, Pogue says, of a "tall tale" printed in several Missouri newspapers about a wounded goose which was rescued by one of his fellow-geese. Winston E. Locker, of Iantha, Mo., says that James Wadlow claims to have shot the goose.

Wadlow's story was that while he and two friends were duck hunting near Sumner, a flight of geese came over and Wadlow fired twice at one of the birds, wounding it. He avers another goose dived about 10 feet to get under the injured comrade, which alighted on the second goose's back, and carried it for about 150 feet until the wounded bird was able to wing away on its own power.

Elusive Bird

It is no secret that many expert trap shooters with very good records seldom get Bonasa umbellus—the ruffled grouse—on the fly. Any reasonably good shot can hit a clay pigeon, but it is a much different story when a rocketing grouse is the target.

The gunner must have his mind completely on his work when he is trying to bag this king of all game birds. Grouse very seldom fly in a straight line and, as every grouse hunter knows, they have the infuriating faculty of managing to get tree or shrub between them and the gun in practically nine out of every ten cases.

Their curving flight is very rapid and their amazing speed almost makes the hunter dizzy as he watches the bird dodge around hemlocks and pines so fast that there is very little chance to get a bead on it at all.

Thieves stealing public property are reported to the authorities. Game is public property, game violators are truly thieves and reporting such violators is a moral law.

Stunted Fish

The problem of stunted fish is not new. As early as 1875, Frank Buckland had published in his book, "Log-book of a Fisherman and Zoologist," comments on the kinds of fish seined from a small pond in England. He wrote:

"It was a very extraordinary thing to remark that, as a rule, the fish we caught were either very little or very big; there seemed to be no intermediate size. I cannot quite account for this, but it is worthy of remark that there were no predaceous fish among these herbivorous fish. It is generally the case where you have too many roach or crap, and no jack or perch, i.e., all sheep and no wolves, the fish are exceedingly abundant, but are all very small. It is necessary in stocking ponds always to consider the balance of life, and put into them such as will keep down super-abundant population, and therefore prevent degeneration of the stock of vegetable feeders."

Predator Data

The fish and wildlife service is recommending that farmers avoid indiscriminate shooting and trapping of small predators, and rely instead on selective trapping to take the occasional poultry-killing skunk or weasel.

It also urges that nesting boxes be placed for use of small species of owls. The service points out that certain predatory animals which keep mice under control are among the farmer's best friends.

All It Takes

A lawyer, whose business for several months had been none too good, was roused from his perusal of his lawbooks by the entrance of a timid-looking woman.

"I came about my husband," she said, "I want to know if I can get a divorce from him."

He slammed the book shut and countered, "Are you married, madam?"

"Yes, of course," she replied.

"Well, you can get a divorce, then," he assured her.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Billion Dollars Cut From ECA Fund By House Foreign Relations Group; Truman Plans Speaking Campaign

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FOREIGN AID:

Billion Lopped

Whether it portended a more realistic view toward European recovery needs, or was just symptomatic of a seasonal purse-tightening effort on the part of some congressmen, there were major headlines in the fact that the house foreign affairs committee lopped a billion dollars off foreign aid requests for next year.

Slashing a proposal made by President Truman, the committee went on to recommend that the existing gap in foreign relief be filled with U.S. farm surpluses.

THAT WOULD make sense to most Americans, probably, except those so energetically and enthusiastically committed to foreign aid without any limit or restrictions, that they brand as narrow isolationists anyone who argues that U.S. welfare ought to be considered along with welfare of other nations.

Paul G. Hoffman, foreign recovery administrator, was unable to say immediately what effect the foreign aid plan slash would have. He said he would prefer to study the proposal and ascertain what kind of farm surpluses the government has in its bins, and whether Europe needs them.

HE SAID he already knows these surpluses include wheat, cotton and tobacco. A house committee member also named these three and added corn, oats, barley, fats, oils and dairy products. No mention was made of the huge surpluses of potatoes and eggs which America also has on hand.

Hoffman, who most likely would end up opposing surpluses in lieu of cash, would be hard put, it appeared, to make the average American believe that a war-ravaged Europe couldn't use, or didn't need, such items as eggs, potatoes, corn, fats oils and dairy products. There are many American families right here at home who would be delighted if they ever had a sufficiency of any of these items.

RED CURBS:

Caution Urged

The federal justice department has warned congress to "move with caution" in acting on anti-Communist legislation, some of which, the department said, would "inflict punishment on named groups without jury trial."

THUS the nation is treated to the ironical paradox of having the restrictions of its own constitution prevent an action designed at preserving and protecting that constitution.

As an example, Peyton Ford, assistant to U.S. Attorney General McGrath, told the house un-American activities committee "it is by no means certain" that the constitutionality of such legislation could be upheld.

AS ALMOST every schoolboy knows, the constitution was kicked around plenty during the days immediately preceding World War II on the pretext that such violations were for the "safety of the nation."
